His Tone Cautious But Tough

PARIS (AP) Khrushchev arrived Satur-day for a showdown summit meeting on world tensions and tartly - but cautiously — accused un-named influential circles of trying to preserve a cold war atmosphere.

Western officials at once detected signs of an attempt by the Soviet premier to drive a wedge between the United States and its western allies.

UNDER PRESSURE

Khrushchev's tone was cautious in an airport address. One highly placed westerner said it seemed Khrushchev, while anxious not to wreck the summit meeting in advance by playing too heavily on the U2 plane incident, still was under severe pressure from his own politicians at home to continue talking tough.

At the same time westerners regarded as highly significant Khrushchev's prompt move to arrange a meeting with British Prime Minister Harold Mac millan, who arrives Sunday morning, two hours after President Elsenhower. A Khrush-chev meeting with President Charles de Gaulle of France already had been arranged.

NO KHRUSHCHEV BID

Both these meetings were arranged upon Khrushchev's arranged upon Khrushchev's initiative, and observers found in this an indication that Khrushchev was attempting to divide the western allies. There was no Khrushchev request for a meeting with President Eisenhower, and there was no indication that any such reindication that any such request was going to be made.

guest was going to be made.

Eisenhower, Macmillan and de Gaulle are scheduled to meet with Chancellor Konrad Adenauer of West Germany Sunday afternoon for a Western summit huddle. By that time de Gaulle will have had his meeting with Khrushchev and will be able to fill in his colleagues on what took place.

PLUNGE SUMMIT

Diplomatic quarters said Khrushchev could plunge the summit talks into a procedural crisis at the start if he presses his demand for East German observer status. The Western powers, they said, might accept East German problem but not on the question of Western rights in Berlin.

Maj. Fowler went after the missile and blew it up with the Falcon. The Matador was not carrying an explosive warhead.

Determined Eisenhower Stays Silent On Way to Crucial Summit Parley

Spy Incident to Support Open-Skies Argument

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Eisenhower took off Saturday night for the Paris summit conference and a face-to-face meeting with Soviet Premier Khrushchev under tensions heightened by the U.S. spy plane affair.

There was an absolute minimum of ceremony at the departure and only a few officials were on hand to bid Eisenhower farewell. Church bells pealed in Washington to wish him Godspeed, but at the airfield only a few onlookers attended, although earlier thousands had been at the sprawling air force base to watch Armed Forces Day demonstration.

POSITIVE ASSET

Authoritative officials said Eisenhower hopes to convert the international furore over the spy plane into a positive asset at the conference table. If challenged, they said, Eisenhower is ready to cite the spy incident as an argument in favor of his plan for open-stein size is inspection of defence potentials.

Governor-General's Visit

THE first official tour of the Canadian West by Governor-General George Vanier is turning out to be a human and happy occasion. Every-where they have been so far His Excellency and Mrs. Vanier have been met with a markedly warm welcome Their comments on "the last west" in Canada, so different from storied versions of it, have been both acute and pleasing. It is as a friend that Governor-General Vanier will renew his acquaintanceship of our Western cities in times to come.

In Victoria interest is mounting as the vice-regal visit approaches. His Excellency and Mrs. Vanier will land from HMCS Fraser at the Black Ball wharf in the inner harbor at 6 p.m. tomorrów, after passage from Van-The visit will last until 3.30 p.m. on Wednesday, when they will re-embark on the same ship for the mainland. In between there is an of the nation made by the new inagreed upon program, designed to cumbent at Rideau Hall.

give Victorians a good opportunity of welcoming Canada's new Governor-General, and they will wish to do so. The community itself was never in better shape for the occasion than it is at present, with the long, slow growth of five months proliferating the wealth of flowers in its gardens.

A veterans veteran, the Gover-nor-General has asked expressly to be brought into contact with the be brought into contact with the garrison forces here. There will be good opportunity for that afforded in the working out of the official program. It is as distinguished Canadians, however, that His Excellency and Mrs. Vanier will be right welcome for themselves, apart entirely from the formality and protocol of vice-regal receptions. Victoria is proud regal receptions. Victoria is proud of its own setting at the fringe of Canada's West, and happy to have been included in the first official tour

Outside But Disturbing

IT is an irony of history that one of the potential greats among nations -already bordering on that category -will have no part in the summit conference. It is China's fault that she is outside the comity of nations, although the line that distinguishes between Communist China and Communist Russia grows daily thinner. The West is still mindful also of the Korean War and so recent a memory is not easy to forget.

The situation nevertheless is that a powerful nation with the means to upset the effects of any summit agreements is on the outside looking in, and without being bound by any concordance arrived at, temporary or permanent. Since she has no say in ettlements made at world councils China in the pursuit of her own ambitions would have no scruple about taking an adverse course. And since the international scene is inter-dependent Red China could rock the oat considerably.

Nor is her affinity with Soviet Russia a factor to be relied on as a deterrent to unilateral action on her part. Russia in fact must have cause to view with some disquiet the rise in strength and potential influence of her Chinese ally. It will never be with Soviet acquiescence that Red China should outstrip Russia and assume the leadership of the Com-munist world. Yet that is a fear that must haunt the Kremlin even while the appearance of Communist solidarity is maintained. In sheer man-power Red China overweighs °all others and it can only be a matter of time until she is formidably equipped militarily, industrially, and politi-

The shape of the world is thus bound to alter, and the balance of power to change in consequence. Sooner or later Red China must be admitted to the ranks of the summit nations, if only through the general caution of those constituting the pres-ent grouping of major nations. That may not be yet but inevitably it is in the offing, so that as press dis-patches describe it a shadow hangs-over the forthcoming talks of the Paris conference. Red China looms as a disturbing factor on the outside.

Age Ratios Rising

FROM available vital statistics it is clearly indicated that after the next 15 years there is going to be such an increase in the percentage of senior citizens over the pensionable age that it may be beyond the ability of the country to support them in unproductive roles.

By 1975 there will be a 69 per cent increase in the number of Canadian workers between the ages of 45 and 34, and only a 6 per cent rise in the 20-44 age group. Dr. Hall, president of the University of Western Ontario, has asked the question: "Can our economy stand the increased financial

Even today the federal govern-ment is making payments to 35 per cent of the population, either in the shape of family allowances to those under 15 or pensions to those over 70. In a country of about 17% million people, this means that over 5.000.000 people, this means that over 5,000,000 are being "subsidized."

As this problem grows, it is evident that some steps may have to be taken to revise the existing retire-ment age levels. In Britain a recent survey showed that only 25 per cent of employees left work on account of ill-health and 57 per cent because they had reached the compulsory

As the Canadian average age becomes older the problem of the man at 65 and the woman at 60 who may have to retire, but are still in good will become increasingi nificant to industry, business and to governments.

Dr. Hall, an expert on these matters, notes that the Canadian aged 60 ters, notes that the Canadian aged 60 has an average life expectancy of 17 years, so that some system, which would replace automatic retirement by an easing up program for older workers, may become necessary if the earning capacity of the country is to be maintained at a level to meet its social legislation expenditures.

There is little hope for agreement on the questions of West Berlin and divided Germany. Moscow has rejected the Germany. Moscow has rejected the West's idea of free elections for all Berlin. Thus, the four leaders seem to be eting not for the sake of agreeing, but for the sake of meeting. Has Khrushchev been calling the shots for the summit?

When he and President Eisenhower agreed last September to a summit meet-U.S. understanding was that there would be no fixed agenda. Five months sians laid down an agenda: Disarmament the Berlin-German questions, nucle weapons tests and East-West relations.

More than 200 "send-a-dime" letters arrived at the White House addressed to President Franklin D. Roosevelt. This is particularly true of appliances, furniture and larger mer-chandise, You go into a "store" filled with the most attractive goods, none of which is for sale. They are all samples. You order what you want, and it is delivered from some distant warehouse, or even from the manufacturer, who may be in another town.

In big cities, where centrally cated downtown space is very costly, it is too expensive to maintain ware premises of the "store," the show room. Besides, delivery of goods from a downtown store to the perimeter of our ever-bulging cities becomes more more of a problem. The Public Utilities Commission has just concluded hearings in respect to the sale and upkeep of burial piots, markers, and the disposal of cremated human remains. Some of the evidence would indicate that certain people have a vested interest in death and wish to retain that interest.

I would suggest that a "Greater Victoria Parks Trust" beformed to handle trust funds for the upkeep of various parks, say, Beacon Hill, Uplands, Saxe Point, Mt. Douglas, Thetis Lake and Christie Point, if this should eventually be made into a public park.

Instead of money being spent on expensive caskets, burial plots, grave markers, etc., people who so desired could will their bodies to the trust with instructions that their bodies be cremated and the askes scattered in certain spots in any of the parks. No markers of any kind would spots in any of the parks. No markers of any kind would be permitted, but the trust would keep records of the names of the bequeathers and of the spot at which their ashes were scattered.

This man is your neighbour...

You can be a good neighbour to this man who has come to grief through misfortune or misdeed. In the hostels, havens, homes and hospitals of The Salvation Army, such men are given compassionate help and led back to health in body and spirit. The message of hope is carried even to those in prison and offenders are often placed in the care of The Salvation Army in lieu of sentence. To you this man may be a stranger, but like the man befriended by the Good Samaritan whom the Master praised, he is your neighbour.

By your contribution to such works of mercy you can know the happiness of being a good neighbour in a practical way.

Even without meeting him one has to like Al Lopez, manager of the Chicago White Sox, for a viewpoint he expressed earlier this year.

No," said the sincerely-devout Lopez in answer to a question, "I don't pray for victory. If I pray and the other fellow prays, what's He going to do?"

It's a refreshing change from the egoism of those who like to credit Divine intervention for their victories.

Oh, well, most everyone will be in shape for next season.

* * * Maybe he doesn't look it but middleweight-champion Gene Fullmer has to rank with the wits of his day for two recent announcements

The first came when he said he wouldn't give Joey Giardello a return bout because Giardello was "too dirty." Then, flushed by success, Fullmer proudly stated it wouldn't be long before he would have to step down and give his title to kid-brother Don.

Come to think of it, that last one wasn't really funny.

That's the only way Don is going to get that title. If you think the statement is presumptious then you didn't watch Wednesday's fight presentation on that eye that isn't

It isn't earth-shattering news, I know, but it was interesting to read that the Louisville club of the American Association once had an infield which played every inning of every game one season. The ironmen were first-baseman Jay Kirke; second-baseman Joe McCarthy who was later to become one of the all-time great major league managers; third-baseman Red Corriden and shortstop Roxey Roche.

If Man O' War wasn't the greatest race horse who ever lived, he wasn't far from it. He won 20 of the 21 races he entered, earned $249,465, and became a beloved track legend. Last year they held a race in his memory at Acqueduct Park called, simply enough, the Man O' War Handicap.

It drew so many entries they had to run two races. The total prize money offered came to just about what Man O' War earned, which proves nothing, perhaps, except that it's thought-provoking to read almost side-by-side that the World Refugee Fund isn't what it should be and that someone has just paid $1,250,000 for a race horse.

Club Started in 1888 Begins Busy, New Life

By CAREL KENDALL

The oldest tennis club in Victoria now has a brand new look.

The usual plonk, plonk of tennis balls heard around Victoria Lawn Tennis and Badminton Club at this time of year will now be accompanied by occasional splashes, as the club has a swimming pool.

Other changes on the club's site, between Foul Bay Road and Fort Street, include a remodelled clubhouse.

For the past weeks members have been ripping out wans and putting in windows to give the building a roomier, lighter look.

The sawing and banging finished and the last daub of paint dried just in time for yesterday's opening day.

The swimming pool was launched with an open house and a full program to entertain members and guests started early in the afternoon.

First to get wet were five bathing beauties who dived into the pool through a paper screen. They were members of the YMCA Swimming Club, and the combined male and complete the property of the transport of the started of the screen combined of the screen comb female team gave an exhibition of precision swimming and diving and precision swimming and diving and comic acts, led by Archie McKinnon. Entertainment designed for the ladies was a show of fashions from Hudson's Bay Company, modelled around the pool and commentated by Adele Goult.

A skin diving display followed, given by the club's own members.

Then attention was turned to the tennis courts where an exhibition game was played by four of the club's top stars.

Canada's No. 1 Woman Player

Susan Butt, who is seeded Canada's No. 1 woman player, was seen in action with Sharon Whittaker, well-known local former junior star, Ted Smytne, city chan Freser, Victoria's leading junior play-er and Canada's No. 5 junior. Sharon Whittaker is also No. 2 badminton

The audience joined the fun and the courts and pool quickly filled with eager members. Gaieties continued at night with a cocktail party and a dance. The badminton courts were trans-formed with trees and blossoms to add an early summer touch to the occasion, and over 200 members danced there to Charlie Hunt and his

Racquets, both badminton and tennis, swing all the year round at this club and in case more exercise is needed there is a steady whiri of dances to keep muscles trained.

A Harvest dance in September ends the official tennis season, although hard courts are still open for alay.

Badminton authorities then take over and start off with an Open In-vitational dance in October which follows a badminton tournament.

Masquerade Dance Popular

Perhaps the most popular dance of all is the annual masquerade, held in November, when tennis and badminton players don false eyelashes and masks and fail to recognize each other.

New Year's Eve Is another regular date for a Victoria Lawn Tennis and Badminton Club dance, and in February comes the Valentine dance.

The badminton season ends with a spring dance all ready for the tennis enthusiasts to come into their own enthusiasts to come into their own again.

The new pool will change the atmosphere of the club as more family parties are expected to gather and the smell of barbecue suppers will no doubt waft around the district.

With soothing piped music in the air a n d lounging bathing beauties surely none of the members are contemplating going AWAY for holidays?

'Little Mo' Played Here

Victoria Lawn Tennis and Badminton Club first came into being in 1888. In 1956 the club was selected as the site for the North American Davis cup tie between Canada and the United States.

In 1948 Maureen Connolly played here in the B.C. championships as a shy 13-year-old girl. Later she became known as "Little Mo" and was a Wimbledon champion.

Other tennis notables needing no introduction who have played at the club are Bill Tilden, Don Budge, and Jack Kramer.

Jack Kramer.

Hughes

Former members of note are Bernie Schwengers, a Davis Cup player, Cmdr. J. C. I. Edwards and Bud Hocking who received national tennis ranking and Harvey Hurd, (still a member), a former Canadian junior badminton champion.

Membership now totals 500.

Junior membership is full with a capacity of 150.

Many of the juniors show great promise and all are enthusiastic in their turnouts for coaching.

Some early starters are only seven years old.

years old.

With the many grass and hard courts and practice wall, it is certain that much more energy and enthusiasm will be expended right here.

Members of the board of directors meet to look over reconditioned clubhouse. Elsie Cooley, director of badminton, is seen with Andy Pitkethley, financial director, and Jim McArthur, president, right.

Leave Them in Bed

HYACINTH BULBS. (A.D., Victoria). As long as the blooms were satisfactory, it is not necessary to take up hyacinth bulbs. Simply leave them in the ground, give them a little soluble fertilizer or fish emulsion in water once a week and keep them green and growing as late into the summer as possible. Nip off the spent flower heads but leave the stalks and leaves untouched. Only when the foliage turns yellow of its own accord may you cut it down and tidy up the bed.

If you must get them out of there in order to plant up the bed with summer flowering annuals, dig them up very carefully, taking a good ball of soil around the roots, and transplant them to a row in the vegetable plot out back where they can complete their job of plumping up the bulb for next year's flowers.

SICK RASPBERRIES. (F.W. Victoria). It is difficult to say just what caused the death of your rasp berry canes as there are quite a few infections which could destroy them, but from your description of the symptoms, my guess would be a fungus known as Crown Rot. This is quite common on heavy soil where the drainage is poor.

If you put in a new plantation his fall, do your best to improve the drainage. Dig the site over deeply, working in coarse sand, coal ashes or anything of a gritty nature. Work a little Lawn and Soil Fungicide into each planting pit and keep the canes sprayed regularly throughout the growing season (except during the blossoming period) with an all-pur-pose orchard spray containing Cap-tan as one of its ingredients.

PLANT DICTIONARY. (M.H., Victoria). I don't quite know what you mean when you ask me to recommend a good plant dictionary. If you mean a good plant dictionary. If you mean a pronunciation guide, a very good and inexpensive volume is "Plant Names Simplified" by A. T. Johnson and H. A. Smith, published by Collingridge, London.

If you want a plant encyclopedia giving cultural directions, I suggest Taylor's Encyclopedia of Gardening, which I believe is now published in two volumes, I saw a copy of this in a local bookstore recently for $4.

HAWAIIAN TI PLANT. (W.C., Victoria). Your Hawaiian Ti log, started and sprouted in water, should be planted up now in a pot of woods; soil—the purchased African viole soil is fine. The manner of planting will depend on the position of the roots and shoots. Ideally, the log should be just barely covered, lying prizontally in the soil but, as long as you get the rooted portion covered, it will grow satisfactorily

FLOWERLESS DAFFODILS.
(F.J.M., Victoria). There is no such thing as a "sterile" daffodil bulb and all bulbs are capable of blooming when old enough and it given the proper care. Your bulbs which came blind this year, producing all leaves and no flowers, are probably overcrowded and splitting up into bulbs too small to bloom.

I suggest you dig them up this summer after the foliage dies down naturally. Dry them off in the shade and store ur'il fall, replanting, the biggest ones where you want them to bloom. If you wish, the little fellows can be grown on in a nursery fellows can be grown on in a nursery bed or in a row in the vegetable garden until big enough to take their places out front.

With bulbs naturalized in grass, a very common cause of failure to bloom is a passion for tidiness—moving the grass and cutting down the bulb foliage before it has had a chance to replenish the stored nustrients in the bulb.

CHICKWEED IN THE LAWN.
(E.K., Victoria). Chickweed is a persistent pest and ordinary weedkillers based on 2.4-D won't touch it, but it can be eradicated by spraying with a solution of Crab Grass Killer in water. Used as directed on the package, this will not have the lawn. age, this will not harm the lawn grasses.

NBC Dewailed the Twain

HOLLYWOOD (UPI)-The third major TV show within a month based on the life of Mark Twain proved Friday night a good thing can be

An hour-long version of "Roughing It" on NBC was as rough on viewers as it was on Twain.

# # h James Daly, playing the writer-humorist in his old age, appeared on screen in near-perfect makeup spouting a few Twain bon mots, but his exaggerated cracker-barrel accent transformed the characterization into an imperfect immitation of Charley

Most of the hour was devoted to a series of flashbacks from Daly as the elderly Twain to youthful Between Daly and Prine, Twain never quite met.

"Roughing It" was based on Twain's quest for $1,000,000 in the mining regions of Nevada, of which he wrote with wit and compassion.

The script, when sticking to Twain's words, rang true. But scenes of the Wild West were enough to make Twain jump like one of his famed Calaveras frogs. For some reason NBC chose to shoot all the "western" scenes on a New York stage with flimsy sets.

* * * The first 40 minutes of flashbacks appeared to have no point, little drama and only flashes of Twain's humor. The final 20 minutes were devoted to his discovery and loss of a silver mine.

One particularly funny scene took place in a blizzard, but it wasn't so much the situation that elicited laughs as the handfuls of "snow" thrown at the actors as in an old morality play.

This scene as much as any led viewers to consider the show might have been a parody on modern westerns. Perhaps it was an impressionistic video, like with modern art.

If the show was a parody, it was unfair to the memory of one of the world's great humorists and writers. If it was a serious adaptation of "Roughing It," maybe the producers should have tried for Charley Weaver. Unfortunately, NBC dewailed the

LONDON (NANA)—They say here that Vivien Leigh would reconcile with Sir Laurence Olivier at the drop of a request. Not much chance of the latter, though Larry

Tis also rumored here that when Rex Harrison marries actress Taniny Grimes, who looks so much\like the late Kay Kendall, the wedding will take place quietly on the continent with a Portofino honeymoon to follow Rex's appearance in the new Terence Rattigan play.

Tony Quinn was beaming on the "Guns of Navarone" set because wife Kathy has arrived to join him in the elegant little house with garden, formerly occupied by Maureen O'Hara during her "Our Man in Havana" film-

Strange to see a crew-cut con man, played by Robert phens, in the new Margaret Leighton play, "The ong Side of the Park." Great actor, and he's under contract to 20th Century-Fox. Ditto Richard Johnson as the patient husband—he belongs to Metro and appeared in "Never So Few" with Sinates and Lollobrigids. But of course the play is dominated by Miss Leighton in a slightly off-her-rocker role.

Carl Foreman doesn't talk about it, but one of the boats borrowed from the Greek government for his "Guns of Navarone" had a hole blown out on one side—unscheduled in the script.

"This is Anthony Nutting," said the cultivated voice at the other end of the telephone. Nutting, former minister of state, is helping producer Sam Speigel with "Lawrence of Arabia" to star Marion Brando. To my question, "Will the Arabs co-operate with Mr. Speigel?". Nutting replied, "exceptions are made, and they are delighted to have this movie filmed in Jordan."

The Marquis of Bath, who paid £600 for those two paintings by Hitler, may have to throw them out. Neither his family or his servants approve of the purchase. There were others who wanted to buy the daubs at the auction in order to destroy them.

How do Cary Grant and Betsy Drake spend their evenings in London? They drive in Cary's Rolls-Royce to a spot decided upon beforehand. Then they walk hand in hand, with the Rolls following, until they get tired; then in they pop and it's "Home, James." There was a scene like this in "indiscreet" with Cary and Ingrid Bergman.

Charlie Chaplin is ready to release his "Chaplin Revue," a 150-minute mixture of his early films, with new music by Chaplin, also a commentary. The onetime silent tramp of the screen opens with, "This is Charlie

Western officials at once de-tected signs of an attempt by the Soviet premier to drive a wedge between the United States and its western allies. UNDER PRESSURE

Khrushchev's tone was cautious in an airport address. One highly placed westerner said it seemed Khrushchev while anxious not to wreck the summit meeting in advance by playing too heavily on the U2 plane incident, still was under severe pressure from his own politicians at home to continue talking tough.

At the same time westerners regarded as highly significant Khrushchev's prompt move to arrange a meeting with British prime minister Harold Macmillan, who arrives Sunday morning, two hours after presi dent Eisenhower, A Khrush chev meeting with President Charles de Gaulle of France already had been arranged. NO KHRUSHCHEV BID

Both these meetings were arranged upon Khrushchev's initiative, and observers found in this an indication that Khrushchev was attempting to divide the western allies. There was no Khrushchev request for a meeting with President Elsenhower, and there was no indication that any such re-quest was going to be made.

After checking of its reliability, operation and separation from the carrier rocket, the cabin—like the space ship itself — will begin descending on command from the earth.

Tass said the space ship would be controlled from the earth but no attempt will be made to bring the "dummy spaceman" back to bearth.

The Russians' last major space feat was Oct. 4, 1959, when they launched a cosmic rocket carrying into space an "automatic interplanetary station" with scientific and radio equipment.

Work a little Lawn and Soil Fungicide into each planting pit and keep the canes sprayed regularly throughout the growing season (except during the blossoming period) with an all-pur-pose orchard spray containing Cap-tan as one of its ingredients.

PLANT DICTIONARY. Victoria). I don't quite know what you mean when you ask me to recom-mend a good plant dictionary. If you mean a pronunciation guide, a very good and inexpensive volume is "Plant Names Simplified" by A. T. Johnson and H. A. Smith, published by Collingridge, London.

If you want a plant encyclopedia giving cultural directions, I suggest Taylor's Encyclopedia of Gardening, which I believe is now published in two volumes. I saw a copy of this in a local bookstore recently for $4.

HAWAHAN TI PLANT, (W.C. Victoria). Your Hawaiian Ti log, started and sprouted in water, should be planted up now in a pot of woodsy soil—the purchased African violet soil is fine. The manner of planting will depend on the position of the roots and shoots. Ideally, the log should be just barely covered, lying horizontally in the soil but, as long as you get the rooted portion covered, it will grow satisfactorily. FLOWERLESS DAFFODILS.
(F.J.M., Victoria). There is no such thing as a "sterile" daffodil bulb and all bulbs are capable of blooming when old enough and if given the proper care. Your bulbs which came blind this year, producing all leaves and no flowers, are probably overcrowded and splitting up into bulbs too small to bloom.

I suggest you dig them up this summer after the foliage dies down naturally. Dry them off in the shade and store until fall, replanting the biggest ones where you want them to bloom. If you wish, the little fellows can be grown on in a nursery bed or in a row in the vegetable garden until big enough to take their places out front.

With bulbs naturalized in grass, a very common cause of failure to bloom is a passion for tidiness— mowing the grass and cutting down the bulb foliage before it has had a chance to replenish the stored nu

An hour long version of "Roughing It" on NBC was as rough on viewers as it was on Twain.

James Daly, playing the writer-humorist in his old age, appeared on screen in near-perfect makeup spout-ing a few Twain bon mots, but his exaggerated cracker-barrel accent transformed the characterization into an imperfect immitation of Charley

Most of the hour was devoted to a series of flashbacks from Daly as the elderly Twain to youthful Clemens, played by Andrew Prine. "Roughing It" was based on Twain's quest for $1,000,000 of the Between Daly and Prine, the Twain never quite met.

The script, when sticking to Twain's words, rang true. But scenes of the Wild West were enough to make Twain jump like one of his famed Calaveras frogs. For some reason NBC chose to shoot all the "western" scenes on a New York stage with flimsy sets.

The first 40 minutes of flashbacks appeared to have no point, little drama and only flashes of Twain's

This scene as much as any led viewers to consider the show might have been a parody on modern westerns. Perhaps it was an impressionistic video, like with modern art.

If the show was a parody, it was unfair to the memory of one of the world's great humorists and writers. If it was a serious adaptation of "Roughing It," maybe the producers should have tried for Charley Weaver. Unfortunately, NBC dewailed the Twain.

Larry Only Has to Ask

LONDON (NANA)—They say here that Vivien Leigh would reconcile with Sir Laurence Olivier at the drop of a request. Not much chance of the latter, though Larry was the first to congratulate Lady Vivien on her huge success on Broadway in "Duel of Angels."

"Tis also rumored here that when Rex Harrison marries actress Tammy Grimes, who looks so much like the late Kay Kendall, the wedding will take place quietly on the continent with a Portofino honeymoon to follow Rex's appearance in the new Terence Rattigan play.

Tony Quinn was beaming on the "Guns of Navarone" set because wife Kathy has arrived to join him in the elegant little house with garden, formerly occupied by Maureen O'Hara during her "Our Man in Havana" filming.

Strange to see a crew-cut con man, played by Robert Stephens, in the new Margaret Leighton play, "The Wrong Side of the Park." Great actor, and he's under contract to 20th Century-Fox. Ditto Richard Johnson as the patient husband—he belongs to Metro and appeared in "Never So Few" with Sinatra and Lollobrigida. But of course the play is dominated by Miss Leighton in a slightly off-her-rocker role.

Carl Foreman doesn't talk about it, but one of the boats borrowed from the Greek government for his "Guns of Navarone" had a hole blown out on one side—unscheduled in the script,

"This is Anthony Nutting," said the cultivated voice at the other end of the telephone. Nutting, former minister of state, is helping producer Sam Spelgel with "Lawrence of Arabia" to star Marion Brando. To my question. "Will the Arabs co-operate with Mr. Speigel?" Nutting repiled, "exceptions are made, and they are delighted to have this movie filmed in Jordan."

The Marquis of Bath, who paid £600 for those two paintings by Mitter, may have to throw them out. Neither his family or his servants approve of the purchase. There were others who wanted to buy the daubs at the auction, in order to destroy them.

How do Cary Grant and Betay Drake spend their evenings in London? They drive in Cary's Rolls-Royce to a spot decided upon beforehand. Then they walk hand in hand, with the Rolls following, until they get tired; then in they pop and it's "Home, James." There was a scene like this in "indiscreet" with Cary and Ingrid Berg-

Charile Chaplin is ready to release his "Chaplin Revue," a 150-minute mixture of his early films, with new music by Chaplin, also a commentary. The one-time silent tramp of the screen opens with, "This is Charlie Chaplin speaking."

Is Brigitte Bardot taking the Swiss cure for taxes? There's a report here that she is setting up a company in Switzerland for her movies and for commercial products bearing her name. I love B.B.'s answer to the unauthorized ad slogan, "B. B. Loves Charrier" (water). To which Brigitte has authorized a rival water company to reply, "But the Charriers prefer Vittel."

Young and Old, Their Ranks are Swelling

THESE PILOTS KEEP FEET ON THE GROUND

DON'T PAGINE that model aeropiane flying is only a boys' past-time. Certainly a large number of boys make and fly model aeropianes, but over 100 adults are organized in Victoria in the Model Aero League, and these men build and fly models that have taken months to design and construct.

They are governed by a body known as the Model Aeronautical Association of Canada, and the rules for designing, building and flying are rigid and scientific. The Victoria Model Aeronautics League is the governing body for model flying on the Island.

Recently I spent an afternoon in the basement of a house owned by A. C. George who, with D. P. Collis, regional director of the MAAC, are the leading lights in this fascinating and absorbing hobby. Mr. George's basement is given over entirely to seroplanes and engines.

Completed planes—some of them of six feet wing span—hang from the ceiling; others are racked along the walls. Others again occupy the benches, while half-built models or in various stages of completion stand on the work bench.

Examining these models one begins to realize the vast amount of knowledge and patience that have gone into their construction. Some of the motors that pull these scale models are only an inch in height. They are called "glow engines" because the spark plug—made especially for the model aircraft industry by the same firm that makes the spark plugs in your car, probably—glow permanently, unlike the plugs in an auto-They drive the propellor-or tractor-at speed in excess of 12,000 revolutions per minute and exert a thrust of many pounds.

The fuel tanks are hand-made to fit snugly into the fuselage. A timing device is attached to the motor which can limit the flight of the plane. Automatic controls govern lateral and vertical flight. In some of the models a complicated radio set-up can control the manoeuvre of the plane causing it to climb or dive, to perform figures of eight, tight turns or inside or outside loops, or to land on its rubber-tired wheels.

MANY PEOPLE THINK that all model flying consists of a machine with a terribly noisy engine tearing round in rather aimless circles while a boy or man, helding one end of a wire makes himself giddy by turning round and round, as well. This is only one—and by no means the most popular—form of model flying.

In the city championships, held usually at the beginning of September and which draw competitors from all over the Island and mainland, there are six classifications:

- Hand-launched gilder This is built to a strict specification and is launched—powerless-from ground level. Surprising durations have been achieved in this class. Gliders with no motive power, but built with meticulous exactitude have, by finding a thermal or warm rising volume of air, remained aloft for from two to three minutes.
- Tow-line gliders—These can be of any size and often are built as large as six feet in wing span. They are fitted with a hook under the fuselage, and a nylon cord, 200 feet in length, is attached by a metal ring to this hook. The glider is then launched much in the same manner as a kite. When it has reached its maximum height, a flick of the wrist detaches the cord from the machine and it is in free flight. From that height anything can happen and frequently does. If there are thermals about, the glider might reach an altitude of 1,000 feet. In the event of such a glider entering a cloud or otherwise being lost sight of, the official timekeeper allows 10 seconds for its reappearance. If it is lost to sight for more than 10 seconds the duration is counted from time of reappearance.
- Free flight, rubber-powered models—Here again there is no limit to the size or design of the model. In this classification a large degree of experimentation goes on. For this is the class of the Wakefield Cup Contest, which is held in a different country each year and which brings entries from all over the world. Long durations have been achieved in this class ranging from half an hour to two hours, for, with the twisted rubber motive power used up the machine then becomes to all intents and purposes a powerless glider, and if a thermal has been found, will continue to rise until the thermal is dissipated.
- Free flight, powered model—Here we come into the class of glow-plug engined models. There is no limit to design or size. Not infrequenty, in this class, it is possible to see models up to 10 feet wing span take off like full scale machines and climb rapidly. A timing device limits the free flight to 15 seconds when the motor cuts out. Here again the machine is timed for duration, and object of the filer is to find a thermal so that when the power is cut off the machine will continue to rise.
- Radio-controlled free flight, powered model— In this class, one of the newest, the model is equipped with complicated radio receiving appar-atus and after taking off is controlled by the flier on the ground. Points are awarded for the many evolutions demanded. The field for this type of model flying is almost unlimited, and many city modellers are busy constructing radio-equipped machines for entry in this classification next

e U-Control flying—This is the type of flying where the flier controls the evolutions of his machine, at the end of a 70-foot cable, to rise, turn, loop, perform various intricate patterns and land. In U-Control flying there are five sub-classifications—speed, sport, stunt, dog fights and rat racing.

In the dog fight, two machines, each with eight feet of paper strip trailing from them, engage in mock battles. The object is to tear the paper tail from the opposing machine. This is an exciting event as there is a very good chance of collision. Between two experts a dog fight can continue for as long as the fuel lasts.

In the rat race three machines race simultan-eously round a tight circle 100 times. During that time each machine must land once for a fuel stop. Judging in this class is based purely on speed but the fastest machine is not necessarily the winner, the fastest machine is not necessarily the as time may be lost during the fuel change.

From all this it will be seen that model flying is not merely the pastime of small boys. The adult aero model expert, however, most probably became interested in model flying as a boy, and for that reason is always interested in helping boys with their model problems.

It often happens that a boy receives a model kit as a present. After building his model—rather inexpertly—he tries to fly it, fails to make it "go" and complains the kit was no good.

and complains the kit was no good.

This is where the Model Aero League can help. Any one of the members, being enthusiasts themselves, are available for flying instruction and help. Mr. George tells me that he is very frequently appealed to by boys who have built a kit model and say that it won't fly. The expert and the tyro then go out and discover that the machine can, and does fly. Some minor adjustment, unknown to the tyro, is all that has caused the failure.

Mr. George's becomet is a frequentian place.

tyro, is all that has caused the failure.

Mr. George's basement is a fascinating place, and most evenings is the meeting place of enthusiasts who drop in to talk about their hobby. None of these men will ever become old in the usual sense of the word. They have an absorbing hobby that keeps them interested in their spare time, gets them out in the fresh air, gives them the companionship of men and boys similarly interested. Life is too full, for them, ever to become old. is too full, for them, ever to become old.

Men like A. C. George and D. P. Collis, of Victoria and Jim Crawford of Nanaimo have an interest and a creative urge that will keep them young as long as they live. The money they spend on building model aircraft is an insurance against

THIS IS THE STORY of a man who gave away his entire holdings to the province because he had a great feeling for nature.

It also concerns another man, whose ideals are somewhat similar. Between the two of them, they managed to create the province's newest park-only a few miles from Victoria.

This park contains 168 acres of natural woodland, rich in fauna, and replete with plants and bird life. It is the gift of Thomas Francis, one of the fastdisappearing breed of pioneer men of Vancouver Island.

He had good reasons to feel that way. The place was filled with lillies, shooting stars, trilliums, foxgloves and other wild plants. Over the years he made friends with the deer, ravens, rabbits, birds and other wild life.

THERE ARE OTHER SIDES to Thomas Francis' character. From his maternal side he inherited the love of the forest, the kinship with nature, the independence of spirit that the red man is been with. From his Indian ancestry came the justified suspicion of the white man's motives, the slow yielding to change, the Haidian gift of largesse and bountifulness.

To a hunter who threatened to shoot one of his pet birds, he warned:

You shoot that raven and I'll shoot you.

To logging and real estate agents, who tried to buy his land, his answer was an unswerving negative. In a sense he was a hermit of the hills, an independent man, whose people had lived the same way for thousands of years

In 1946 Francis met another nature lover, the well-known Boy Scout leader Freeman King, president of the Victoria Natural History Society.

King is an energetic man of ideas and an idealist on top of it. Something clicked between the two and a kinship developed that ripened. As a friend put it, King won the old man's confidence. He used to take his Scouts for hikes in the Francis acres.

List February, after fire hit the aging pioneer, King jumped in to help. He enlisted the aid of the Victoria Natural History Society and the Thetis Park Sanctuary Association. They agreed to go along. King has the gift of having people like to work for him.

Fifty workers, mostly from the natural history society, went into action. Chew Excavating did the initial ground work. Moore Whittington supplied the lumber at a nominal price. Butler Bros. gave the concrete. W. Trace Ltd. put in the septic tank. Thomas & Lindsay gave the tile drain and labor. The master painters of Victoria do-and labor. The master painters of Victoria donated the brush and paint work.

"A bunch of us used to go up every night after supper." King relates. "It was a joy to work with everyone. The milk of human kindness is there. All it needs is something to bring it out. It pulled us together in a common cause. Made good relations. Made a lot of friends for a lot of people . . . We could have furnished the house ten times over."

AMONGST the Scoutmaster's ambitions is the establishment of a belt of green around the city for the future to enjoy. He has seen the miserable mistakes of cities of the east where they are trying to buy back half-acre bits for as high as $10,000.

He felt that Francis might assist in the attainment of his goal. The Francis property had the added qualification of being a buffer against further encroachment from the east on Thetis Lake Park, already sold in part to the B.C. Electric Co.

"Why don't you give it to the government?

King asked Francis.

King asked Francis.

"Well, I would like to," the pioneer replied.

"Til approach them and see how they feel about it. Your particular ideas will be respected."

King was well aware of the precarious financial position of the elderly Francis. He knew that he might yield to the blandisments of speculators in order to recoun his lesses. King burgled laters in order to recoup his losses. King hurried to the government and outlined the plan in all

The government has gone one step further.

It has appointed Tommy honorary fire warden of the park. The old gentleman will live out his days in the little cottage, and in a sense will still be king of the land he has preserved so well.

URSULA JUPP'S STORY OF OLD GORDON HEAD

Part II

LIFE WASN'T EASY. "No matter what you write or say no one did not live through it can imagine the hard-ship and ionliness of those years!" The ence with which the words were uttered carried more clearly than the speaker realized an image of the rigors of life for the pioneer of Gordon Head in the last century . . . the back-breaking work of establishing a home in the virgin bush, with tew roads, no conveniences and little time—or energy—left for social life.

The picture was not all dark, of course. On the the picture was not at Gark, of course. On the other hand were the stimulation of opening up a new country, of making crops grow where aone had grown before, and the sharp pleasure that gomes from meetings that are few and far between.

But always those enemies, lonliness and hard-ship, lurked and it was not till the first quarter of this century was nearly over that they were banish-ed—or at least shackeled.

First advance in this battle was the creation in 1896 of the Mutual Improvement Society and the subsequent building of the community hall in 1898. How welcome was its coming and the knowledge that at regular meetings of the "debating society" friends from the far side of the district could be met, talk, music and dancing enjoyed.

MOST JOYOUS NIGHT of all the year was that of the Christmas concert and tree. Then the whole neighborhood gathered — fathers, mothers, children and assorted relatives and friends. Then the great Christmas tree raised its dark arms to the high roof, twinkling with dozens of candles—with a man named Tracy detailed to watch for fire. Then the long tables loaded with sandwiches and iced calces of a wonderful variety stretched the length of the room while above them spaced along the wall coal-dil lamps, with gleaming reflectors, shone brightly. And in the centre of the floor glowed the great heater with its endless stovepipes, burning hotty.

Even before reaching the door the children

Even before reaching the door the children ming up Tyndall Road hill could see the lighted be through the windows and by the time they ned the excited crowd within anticipation was almost agony.

Such joys as were awaiting! Supper first, from those groaning tables, then the concert with its songs and recitations—perhaps that began to seem a bit long if you were very young — and then at last — oh, at happy last — the arrival of Santa Claus and the distribution of the great pile of presents from beneath the tree and tied to its branches. With homes so far apart this opportunity was used for the exchanging of all gifts among young friends and time and ime again were the names called out. But at last the tree was bare and it was time for the walk home, leaving Mr. Tracy to extinguish the remnants of the candles.

ANOTHER REGULAR gathering was at the Sunday service, for from the first the hall's use had been planned in this way, and in early days a small turret—long since removed—over the front entrance indicated this purpose. Morning services were first given by various ministers and lay preachers from the city, but later St. Aidan's Presbyterian Church, at Mount Tolmie, provided for many years a minister for a regular Sunday evening service. From earliest years there was a flourishing school on Sunday afternoons, too, Isaac Somers and W. J. Williamson being superintendents for decades.

Somers and W. J. Williamson being superintendents for decades.

Around 1920 the clergyman from St. Luke's, at Cedar Hill, gave a Wednesday evening service; but after that until the building of St. Chad's, the "church in the valley," in 1955, and St. Richard's, at the top of Feitham Road in 1959, those who wished an Anglican service had to travel the three or four miles to Cedar Hill.

While the hall was providing a centre for companionship life in other ways was becoming a little easier for the early farmers and their families. The opening of a district post-office saved the long walk to Mount Tolmie and brought the outside world a little closer. During the years of its operation it occupied various homes—D. S. McRae's on Tyndall Avenue, W. C. Grant's just across the road from this, the Grays' in the house now marked 4474 Torquay Road, and finally till its closing, in about 1914, at Thrums, the home of G. F. Watson.

SUT A GREATER convenience in postal service was to come with the signing of the contract for the old RMD No. 4 route (now RR5) by W. J. Williamson. Then were installed the familiar delivery boxes at each gate—small ones at first (of these less than half-a-dozen remain in use today) — then the larger boxes to accomodate parcels, and in recent years the green tiers of locked metal boxes.

The story of the start of a mail route and the consequent development — by the son of the original mailman—of a bus service, is an interesting one and deserves more detailed telling.

It was in 1910 that the first mail contract was signed by this settler from the Shetland Islands. In this he guaranteed to leave Victoria each weekday carrying four sacks of mail, one each for the Lake Hill, Mount Tolmie and Gordon Head post offices, and one containing the mail which he had already sorted for the individual boxes along the Gordon Head route.

Head route.

To achieve this an early start had to be made and 7 a.m. saw the express wagon with Buster, Teddy or Blaze between the shafts on its way to the city. On the outward journey after the delivery of the Lake Hill and Mount Tolmie bags, the rural route stops began with the boxes on Gordon Head Road; then around the Head, another stop at the Gordon Head post office, deliveries on Tyndall Avenue, and then home to lunch at the house he had recently built, now 4331 Tyndall Avenue. After lunch, the remainder of the delivery! And so back to the city again with whatever outgoing mail had been picked up from the boxes.

THESE JOURNEYS were not always taken alone—occasionally he was joined on the trip by somone with business in Victoria and would return with him on the mid-afternoon run. Perhaps it was this that led his son back into the passenger insportation business later.

It was in August, 1913, that this son took over It was in August, 1913, that this son took over the mail delivery and for two years he and the horses made the rounds together. But on Oct. 15, 1915, came the great change when the mail arrived by means of a model T Ford!— a novelty in the district in those days, although Sidney Vantreight's 1906 Russell was introduced to Gordon Head in 1907. Worthy of note is the fact that Jack Williamson had purchased the car only the day before, driving it home after 15 minutes instruction at the agency.

In 1916 he added a trailer and began giving In 1916 he added a trailer and began giving express service, too. This was the year of the great snows and finally came the day when the roads became impossible and Jack, having struggled as far as St. Aldan's Church, had to leave the precious car in the carriage shed there and, carrying the mail sack over his shoulder, make his way through the deep drifts to his home, a heavy two miles did not suffice under these wearying circum stances to carry him the further half-mile to the Gordon Head post office that night. And it was next morning before he completed the journey walking then in drifts 10 to 12 feet deep.

Even a heritage of Shetland and Orkney blood

NOW THE SKILL of his father, a shipwright by trade, came to the rescue. Runners were bui till the roads were clear-but with horse-po

With 1918 and the departure of the young ma carrier for overseas, the contract passed to others lengthlest period of delivery being that of Jack Lowe who served the route for 21 years, never missing a day. When he retired a few years ago i was estimated he drove a total of 255,000 miles wearing out six cars and eventually delivering to 550 boxes daily-a tremendous record of service

While in England with the Army young Williamson got the idea of having a bus of his own when he should return to Canada. Oddly enough, when he did get home he found that the same idea had occurred to someone else, Carl Henry, who was already operating a service in the district.

However, by 1921, Jack was able to buy this vehicle—homemade by Carl Henry—"a Ford model T one-ton truck, the body built of wood with side walls up to the seat level only. From there was a canvas curtain that could be pushed sideways on a cord," says J. C. Williamson recalling this first Gordon Head bus.

Left-hand driving was then the rule but on the night of Dec. 31, 1921, Jack and his father worked late changing the entry door to the other side of the vehicle ready for the changover next morning.

Of this day the triver says, "I drove on the right on that New year's morning—slowly! So did everyone else. As car met car each driver would slow to a crawl and stay in the middle of the road till he saw which side the other fellow was taking. It really was fun. Very few accidents in the whole province!"

During 1922 the senior Williamson's skill was employed again as he and his son built a ten-passenger bus body on the old 1915 model T touring car chassis. This did well, but proved too hard on the small rear axle and the body had later to be moved to the chassis of an old 1913 Cadillac. "Never did wear that out." Jack says.

The purchase of a metal-bodied bus in Van couver and also various large touring cars, the entry into the operation of two younger brothens and the inclusion of a service to Cordova Bay, and the inclusion of a service to Cordova Bay, showed that this was a growing business. These buses, like so many others, had their terminus on a main street, the Gordon Head bus's position being outside a drugstore at the corner of Douglas and Johnson

By 1928 the Matson Coach Terminal on Broughton Street had come into being and in the spring of that year they purchased from William-son Brothers the Gordon Head and Codova Bay So ended the story.

But lately this hasn't been enough. What's tar? How do bees carry it? Well, what makes it into honey?

In self-defence I had a long talk with a bee keeper, George Lohr, who maintains a few hives just as a hobby, and came away murmuring in amazement the 16th century words of Guillaume de Salfuste: "For where's the state beneath the de Salluste: "For where's the state beneath the firmament. HONEY IS BIG BUSINESS with nees. have a reputation for unremitting work and all their work is connected with the production of honey. Since each individual bee cannot do every one of the jobs necessary to fulfill their complex acheme of things, a division of labor is the only way to maintain the colony. Each bee has a job to do, and does it well. In fact, the conduct of the colony is so harmonious that some are inclined to attribute high intelligence to bees. Others claim that their behaviour is instinctive, since bees perform all their functions as well the first time as the last, with little improvement from practice. Memory of location is almost their sole adaptation to changing conditions.

Whether bees think things out, or whether their typical behaviour is inherent, their lives follow a well-defined pattern with no room for n-conformists

TAKE THE QUEEN. She knows or senses that there is to be only one queen to a hive and so, if other young queens are hatched out shortly. after the first's emergence from her cell she will kill the pretenders to the throne. After this on-the-spot coronation the queen is ready for her maiden flight, just a few hours after having been hatched, and this means she assumes full sovhatched, and this means she assumes this sovereign duties from then on, since she mates during her first flight and is capable of laying eggs for as long as three years, if allowed to.

Only a few years ago it was thought that a queen mated just this once, flying high up in the air and pursued by a cloud of drones. The strongest male bee wins her favors, but it's the end of him for he dies honeymooning.

By treating a queen with radio-active material and placing a geiger-counter at the entrance to the hive, apiarists found that a queen may go out eral times. This probably accounts for the fact that the drones are pampered all spring and summer in the hive although they don't lift an antenna to work. Somebody has to be on call

About two days after her return to the hive the queen begins to lay eggs, the number depend-ing on the need of the colony and the ability of the worker bees to care for the brood. She the worker bees to care for the brood. She normally deposits one egg to a cell, and future queen bees are laid in cells larger than those of WORKER BEES, in charge of nutrition, feed WORKER BEES, in charge of nutrition, feed the future queens a creamy substance called royal gelly; future worker bees get royal jelly for the first three days, then "bee bread," a mixture of honey and pollen; and drones, significantly, get "bee bread" only. In spite of recent foofaraw in commercial cosmetic circles regarding the potency of royal jelly as a sort of cure all for old-age manifestations, bee-keepers incline towards the feeling that it's for the bees—strictly.

Their queen happily established, with the coming of warm weather and a few buds, usually in April, the honeybees seem to know the nectar flow is on. The maple is one of their first targets, and they delight in the tiny pink flowers of the GOSSIP TRAVELS fast in human circles. In the bees' world news of a honeyfield can be spread so quickly that a whole hive will be on the wing within minutes of the scout's return. This information appears to be publicized by a "dance"—certain movements and gyrations that accurately indicate the location of, say, a field of clover. A German apiarist, with painstaking thoroughss, observed that although he moved a certain we of bees from one place to another, the "dance" hive of bees from one place to another, the "dance" varied to portray changing location, and also in cluded prevailing wind reports.

In minute quantities the nectar is transported to the hive in the bee's abdominal sac, and more or less incidentally pollen clings to the hairs of the nind legs. During his countless field trips the bee unwittingly fulfills the second part of his destiny, the pollination of flowers and trees.

NURSE BEES — young apprentices, not yet ready to be wax-makers—relieve the field bees of their nectar by means of the ligula, or so-called tongue, store it for a short time, allowing excess water to evaporate in the heat of the hive, then place it in wax cells to ripen. This is termed nectar elaboration, which is hardly too grand a word to describe the magic wrought by bees, considering man cannot duplicate mechanically, scientifically or atomically the mixture of necta and a secretion from the bee itself.

About a month is required to ripen honey, and the bees thoughtfully cap the cells with wax when it is ready, inadvertently advising the bee-keeper he can remove that frame of honeycomb from the hive. He slips in an empty frame with a drawn-out foundation—that is, marked with hexagonal impressions rather than a plain flat sheet of wax. This spurs the bees to form more cells on the upper hive bodies used for storage are consupers, and as additional ones are required. are preferably placed beneath those already filled but not yet ready for removal. This adjustment of hive parts facilitates ripening, gives better results in the honey crop and reduces the danger of swarming.

Swarming, the exodus of a number of bees from the hive led by the queen, is a division of the colony natural to bees, but it occurs at the worst possible time for the bee-keeper, usually at the height of the nectar flow. Bees swarm for a number of reasons: overcrowding in the hive, too many drones, discontent with the climate or location of the hive.

In a prime swarm the original queen, with perhaps 10,000 bees out of an average 60,000 to a hive, rushes from the hive and the emigrants fly in great circles, progressing towards some support whence scouts will be sent out to guide the cluster to a suitable new home.

It was due to a neighbor's colony of bees swarming that George Lohr accidentally became a bee-keeper about five years ago. His father and uncle kept bees as a hobby, and the neighbor thought she was speaking to one of the elder Lohrs on the telephone, but George, who received the call, volunteered to go and help.

THE BEES had swarmed onto the branch of a tree. Lohr spread a white sheet on the ground, climbed a ladder into the tree and proceeded to saw off the limb in the approved manner. Although prepared for the weight of the branch, he had forgotten to allow for the honey-laden bees (when they swarm they load their abdominal sacs with food), and the surprising extra 10 pounds caused him to lose his grip. Down crashed the branch, every bee for himself!

Fortunately, swarming bees are not in a

THE QUEEN OF HEARTS she made some tarts . . . and it took her the whole morning. Now with all the quickle foods, she could take a can, a package or a jar and take it easy. And the chances are that the king wouldn't know the difference between the old, slow method tarts and those made with pastry-mix shells and a filling out of a box which directed you to just add water and stir.

tween the old, slow method tarts and tho out of a box which directed you to just a This time of the year when there are a thousand things to be done and all claiming priority, the housewife is mighty glad to take advantage of some of our present day cooking magic. With housecleaning and the g a r d e n both breathing hotly down one's neck one is in the mood to take advantage of jiffy foods. A few years ago it took a housewife five-and-a-half hours to prepare daily meals for a family of four. Today, with the aid of "instant," "ready-to-cook" and "heat-and-serve" foods, she can do it in 90 minutes and still produce meals fit for a king or finicky family.

Jiffy cooking would have made Grandma think the devil was responsible for such ease, while today's housewifes would be horrified at the time-consuming details of Grandmother's cooking.

Have you ever looked at Mrs. Beaton's recipe for Bolled Fowl? "Place a large pan of cold water on the fire, go out and catch a young fowl and chop its head off. Let it bleed until the water boils. Draw it and plunge in the water, then the feathers and skin will come off easily ..." or How to prepare Fish for the Pan in Fannie Farmer's Cook Book... "Remove the scales by drawing a knife over the fish beginning at the tail and working toward the head. Wipe the fish thoroughly inside and out with a cloth rung, out of cold water, removing any clotted blood which may be adhering to the backbone ..." and so on through all the other gorey procedures. What does it say on a package of frozen fish? "Heat and Serve." Is it any wonder that we bless the food industry for what it has done to simplify meal preparation.

SHORT-CUT products do not necessarily endanger a cook's originality. There is not one ready-to-serve food that can not be improved by the individual touch. As a sensitive musician improvises on a theme, so does a good cook improvise on a packaged product. Each cook has her own secret tricks to personalize convenience foods. Today we are going to bypess start-from-scratch cooking (it has its time and place) and talk about time-saving

Let us assume that each time you shop you buy a few items that will go in the freezing compart-ment of your refrigerator or on that shelf where you store ingredients for quick meals. These would you store ingredients for quick meals. These would include frozen or canned soups, canned meat and sea foods, frozen or canned soups, canned meat and sea foods, frozen or canned pie filling and other mixes for cakes, biscuits and such.

Let's start with canned soups . . . I like these better than slow-poke white sauce. You can use them in casseroles, meat loaves, rice or macaroni dishes. For half-hour scolloped potatoes use cubed cooked potatoes, a little chopped green onion, seasonings and undituted cream of chicken, cream of celery or cream of mushroom soup. Much quicker than starting with raw potatoes and the soup gives you a nice choice of flavorings. Run the casserole under the broiler if the top is not brown enough.

For a good sturdy lunch after a morning in the garden fix a package of chicken noodle soup according to directions and then stir in a cup or more of cubed cooked ham. Serve in bowls and have a basket of sliced French bread on the table. Raw fruit and a piece of cheese make a good dessert. fruit and a piece of cheese make a good dessert.

Fish Fillets in tomate soup make a splendid meal. In a saucepan cook half a sliced medium sized onion, and half a sliced green pepper. Use about two tablespoons shortening in the pan. Add one tin tomate soup, one quarter cup water, two one in tomato soup, one quarter cup water, two teaspoons lemon juice, one-eighth teaspoon thyme and a dash of pepper. Cook over low heat about 10 minutes. Pour over one pound fish fillets (thaw if frozen) arranged in a shallow baking dish. Bake in a preheated 400° oven for about 20 minutes. Four servings. Frozen peas and instant mashed potatoes to go with cari be fixed in a jiffy.

go with carr ber fixed in a pliffy.

Now here is a way to personalize frozen meat or chicken pies. Let the pies thaw a few minutes until the top crust is softened but the filling still frozen. Carefully cut around the rim of the pie and lift off the crust. Sprinkle a little curry powder, dry mustard, onlow powder or any herb blend

A package of biscuit mix on the shelf is in valuable. It gives you a head start on all sorts of good things. Do you know that you can make a good inings. Do you know that you can make a quick crusty pie crust for pizza pies, for tart shells to hold savory smorgasbord type fillings or toppings for meat pies by mixing two cups biscuit mix, one half cup soft butter and six tablespoons boiling water? Mix with a fork until a ball is formed, flatten into large or small pans and bake in a 425° oven. You can fill these pie shells before or after they are baked. after they are baked.

or after they are baked.

By adding yeast to biscuit mix you can make bread sticks, tea rings and a dozen other sweet treats and have them out of the oven in an hourand-half from the time you start softening the yeast. For nice crispy bread sticks do this . . . dissolve one package of dry yeast in three-quarters cup warm water. Mix in two-and-a-half cups biscuit mix. Knead until smooth. Divide dough into 16 equal parts. Roll each piece between your palm into pencil like strips eight inches long. Spread two tablespoons soft butter on a large shallow pan. Place strips of dough on pan leaving room between for them to expand. Brush tops with melted butter. Sprinkle with poppy seeds, celery seeds or seseme seeds. Cover with a damp cloth and let rise in a warm place about one hour. Pre-heat the oven to 425° then bake sticks 15 minutes or until lightly brown. Turn oven off. Allow sticks to remain in the oven 15 minutes more to crisp.

TIME WAS, and not so very long ago, when there seemed a sort of stigma on a cake mix. Good cooks used them furtively . . . emptying the mix into a bowl and then burning the box so no one would know that the cake was not a home creation. Today even the ablest cooks will use a cake mix when pressed for time. Most of them are so good that no subterfuge is necessary. My favorite time saver is Angel Food Mix. The flavor and texture are excellent. So many glamorous desserts can be made with angel food as a starting point. Try this . . . split an angel food cake in three. Use lemon pie filling between the layers then cover the whole with stiffly beaten sweetened cream. This is lovely and it looks as if it took hours to make.

Do you know that the Jello people are making pudding mixes in family size to serve six? You can do wonders with a pudding or pie filling mix, and in Jig time, too. Imagination is all you need to personalize it. Someday try this . . . start with a vanilla pudding mix, add a tablespoon of instant coffee to the mix then make as directed on the package. Refrigerate, Then just before serving fold in one-half cup heavy cream, whipped. I call this Rlo Cream and it can be served in sherbet glasses with a fluff of cream and a green cherry on top or use it as filling for a pie. Add a quarter cup toasted sesame seed in the pie crust mix for the pie shell. For a chocolate pie with personality add a quarter teaspoon peppermint extract and a dab of butter to a chocolate pudding mix. If it is for a party, swirl whipped cream on top.

THERE'S A LOVELY DESSERT using cooked rice, whipped cream and maple syrup. The magic time-saving ingredient is of course "quick rice." No gummy or sticky mass will result with pre-cooked rice. It cooks up snowy white and fluffy. For our Pompador Rice simply fold the cooked rice into sweetened whipped cream. Boil the maple syrup for a few minutes to thicken a bit, chill and layer with the rice in sherbet or parfait glasses.

For Aloha Rice Cream combine one cup cooked rice, one half cup each drained crushed pineapple, cut up marshmellows and chopped walnuts. Fold in half cup heavy cream whipped. Pile in sherbet

Quick rice is a natural for savory dishes . . . for that something different to serve instead of potatoes, do this: Cook one cup quick rice, drain it necessary. Combine two eggs beaten with one-half cup milk, one cup shredded cheese, one tablespoon mineed parsely, one teaspoon salt and three tablespoon mineed parsely butter or margarine. Mr. well and spoons melted butter or margarine. Mix well and turn into nine-inch pie plate. Sprinkle with paprika. Bake in a 350° oven for 30 minutes. Serve in wedges. Makes six to eight generous servings, To turn this rice and cheese pie into an entree top each wedge with a baked sausage, bacon or grilled

It is not necessary to spend hours to nake an elegant dessert. A good choice to nd any meal is ice cream or sherbet. Served with a winey blueberry sauce, or crisp cornflakes coated with butter and honey. Blueberry sauce: Mix one-third cup port wine or grape juice, two tablespoons lemon juice with one tin blueberry ple filling. Spoon over vanila ice cream or lemon sherbet. Makes two-and-two-thirds cup sauce.

Crunch cream . . . fold one-half cup crushed hard candy (peppermint canes, peanut brittle or fruit drops) into one cup heavy cream, whipped. Serve as topping on ice cream or layer it between ice cream in a tall glass.

There is no limit to these out it and easies . . .

GREEK CULTURE ROOKS STILL CHALLENGE

THE IMMORTAL GREEKS have had their unique greatness freshly illuminated in "The Greek Experience" (World), a book of shining scholarship by a great classical scholar, Sir C. M. Bowra.

For any reader seriously interested in the meaning of ancient Greece, its noble achievements and narrow failures, this volume is probably as fine a single source as there is. It is an achievement worthy of its subject.

A blend of original interpretation and imaginative scholarship makes the book intellectually exciting. At the same time there is a direct, sinewy strength of language that makes it a special pleasure to read.

Ranging over the centuries from the age of Homer to the from the age of Homer to the fall of Athens in 404 BC, the author focuses his encyclopedic knowledge with equal brilliame on the politics and poetry, religion and science, drama and philosophy, mythology and learning of the ancient seed-bed of Western civilization and modern democracy.

The central principles of Greek thought -- rationalism and intellectualism -- are more needed than ever in our own parlous era, which perhaps helps account for the fact that this volume stands out so prominently in demand.

Brutality, superstition, per-version and irrationality were not unknown among the Greeks, as Bowra makes clear. but this was a people which also defined ideals and aspirations which today still challenge the best minds and

Most of the forgeries emanate from Japan, the German states and Switzerland, and many are executed with a high e of perfection.

The vicar in a small English village wrote a wonderful wto-volume book, now a collector's item, titled "Album Weeds." In book he describes each this book he describes each forgery that has come to his notice. In the case of the Swiss Cantonals he describes no less than 26 forgeries of one particular stamp, most of which are cleverly executed.

Among the German states, those of the early types of Oldenburg are almost impossible to detect and all early types of Japan are torged with government permission, provided that the minute characters are that two minute characters are incorported in any part of the esign. These are cleverly oncealed by forged cancella-ons which obliterate them.

There are always exceptions nowever, and the writer once came across a forged Argen-tine stamp which only cata-logued two cents, the motive being obviously to cheat the post office.

Britain has had few forgeries. One of the most famous, the "Stock Exchange" forgery. a one shilling green, plate 4, was in use for many years without detection and was not discovered for 27 years after ite use was abandoned.

When the late Charles Nissen, one of Britain's lead-ing dealers, purchased a large quantity of stock exchange forms, he was astute enough to recognize the stamps on them as forgeries, but much too late to trace the perpetra-tors and take legal action

A London dealer, V. James, used to issue a monthly price list and on one of these lists offered three forgeries of the penny black of 1840 for the sum of five shillings. Want-ing to use them for compari-son, I ordered them, and on son, I ordered them, and on their arrival found two were lithographs that would not have fooled a child, but the third one mystified me com-pletely as it measured up to the genuine in every particu-

Know ing that Mr. Sugden had com pleted plating every stamp but four in plate eleven, I produced the penny black and asked for his opinion. With his vast knowledge of the different letknowledge of the different let-tering on each of the 11 plates, he startled me by saying: 'This is a genuine copy of plate 11 and is one of the four letterings which would complate 11 and is one of the four letterings which would complete my plate. I will give you $25 for the stamp subject to conditions, if you will take it home and boil it, but if it falls the test of boiling you can give it to me gratis for my reference collection." I duly took it home, boiled it, and under my astonished eyes it turned into astonished eyes it turned into perfectly good plate 11

Plate 11 primarily printed in black, had a very short life as black stamps were unsitable for cancellation. The plate was cleaned and in 1844 subsequent impressions were printed in red. Even these are none too common though not comparable to their black brothers.

Actually the stamp which I presented to Mr. Sugden was not a forgery but rather a ot a forgery but rather a enuine stamp which had been

Charles de Gaulle

His Faith Held Firm

THE ASSIGNING of greatness to individuals is a privilege commonly reserved for posterity, but General De Gaulle long since anticipated its verdict. Nor can we in all honesty deny him the mantle he has draped on his own shoulders. For two acts alone he has won his place in France's Pantheon of heroes. He fought on when his countrymen lay supine at Hitler's feet, and, much later, when the spirit of France was fragmented by political intrigue, he brought order from chaos and provided the strong leadership needed.

The dominant fact about De Gaulle is that he personifies in himself some of the finest qualities of his people. He is stubborn, but he is also strong. He has principles, and he stands by them. He speaks always of "the greatness of France." and in time he convinces you of it. When he was caller out of rectirement in a time of crisis some years ago, a leading British political weekly shrilled: "Today de-mocracy died in France." Re-cently he stood in London's storied parliament, a guest of honor receiving the homage of Britain's assembled leaders Britain's assembled leaders memoirs, unquestionably one of the seminal historic docu-ments of this century. It is written in that lofty, grand-iloquent style we have come to associate with the man. De Gaulle has always seen him-self as a man of destiny, and in time history caught up with him. Throughout the narrative he refers to himself in the third person, as though De Gaulle, the historian, were standing off and recording the deeds of De Gaulle the leader.

He opens with the liberation of Paris and the enoration of Paris and the enormous tasks which confronted him in raising up a beaten people and restoring its national spirit. Again and again he refers to the Allies' oversights and deliberate humiliations of himself. President tions of himself. President Roosevelt was his particular bete noire. No doubt if FDR had lived on as Churchill has, he would be as ready to acknowledge his error as handsomely as Churchill has Hitler's fundamental blun der, De Gaulle believes, lay in assuming that mankind was overwhelmingly base. "It is wrong to behave as if everyone else will never have courage." Certainly De Gaulle never made that mistake. Truman struck him as a simple man who over simplified complex problems. And when you read in these pages of France's intricate inter-party political manoeuvrings, over and above her relations with the rest of the world, Truman's naivete becomes apparent. It was this selfsame political plotting which drove De Gaulle to re-sign and retire to his country home in 1946.

There the book ends on a bucolic, philosophical note, with De Gaulle musing on himself as an "old man, ex-hausted by ordeal, detached from human needs, feeling the approach of the eternal cold, but always watching in the ws for the gle

This is the only note of despair in the entire book, and how triumphantly history has since falsified it! The "old man" is back at the helm, and France, "endlessly vacillating from greatness to decline," is back among the great powers of the world politically, mill-tarily, and—above all—intellectually.

When Enterprise and R. P. Rithet Collided in Ten Mile Point's S

wo were Trapped in Sinking

I SUPPOSE most people who live around Cadboro Bay never give much of a thought to its past; a past which goes back 123 years to the day when Captain Brotchie dropped anchor there in his 70-ton schooner Cadboro to give the pleasant cove a name.

This was in the year that Britons saw a age queen assume the throne, six years before the nearby fort was built and named in her honor. I suppose thereafter, for 21 years, Cadboro Bay, with its sand beach and surrounding bush, lay undisturbed—undisturbed except for the Hudson's Bay Company's farm on top of the hill, between the present abandoned army camp and Lansdowne

Perhaps it was the gold rush that spurred early day legislators and fur trader Joseph W. McKay first to invest in Cadboro Bay. Maybe he saw possibilities when hordes of gold seekers scrambled out of ships at Esquimalt, to equip themselves for the Fraser River. Anyway it was on June 2, 1858, that he bought himself a lot at Cadboro Bay.

It's that part of the country now bounded on the south by Sinclair Road and on the west by Finerty Road, and includes half the beach and ail of Ten Mile Point, Eleven hundred and sixty-two acres, according to the title deed, which he bought for $4,316 or £896 Hings, whichever came h

In later years along came the Evans, Benjamin and Henry, the Hibbens, the Finertys, and the Sinciairs, and Ira Wilson; to farm or run sheep. Later Van Volkenburgh, a Victoria butcher—corner of Yates and Government where the Poodle Dog now stands—built a wharf at Cadboro Bay to facilitate the arrival of his cattle from the mainland, and it was he who built a slaughterhouse there.

At his wharf in the 90's steamboat crowds used to arrive from the mainland for the horse racing at the Willows. To go round to the city wharf was a waste of time for serious minded horse players:

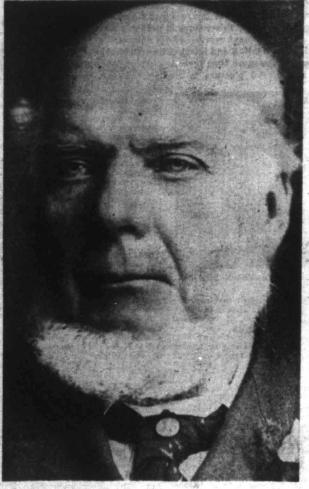

MEANTIME the peninsula known today as Ten Mile Point remained unattractive mainly because of lack of water. A rough trail, however, went out to Maynard's Cove at the end of the point where often, in the past, there has been some stealthy night time movement in smuggled opium and Chinese to the U.S. In fact, what with one thing and another, a good many clandestine endeavors have backgrounded this particular piece of waterfront.

One night, 36 years ago, five shadowy figures walked single file down the Yacht Club gangway, to enter into a fantastic enterprise of modern day piracy and murder. They were all caught, one of them in New York and another in New Orleans. These latter two walked another gangplank a year later at Oakalla. A gangway to a double hanging!

Busiest day in the bay's history was probably July 29, 1885, when, if you'd been around, you would have seen the white sand beach strewn with hroken crates, bales of hay, tables, chairs and shattered woodwork, not to speak of the carcasses of a couple of dozen drowned steers, Out from shore, and hard aground just east of the present-day Royal Victoria Yacht Club, was the 134-foot paddle steamer Enterprise, her main deck almost awash. Around her stern, a foot or two below water, diver Bill Ingham was trying desperately to unlock a dead man's fingers from their grip on the iron bars of a cabin window. Finally they had to lower Ingham a crowbar to pry the whole grating loose, so that willing helpers on deck could haul up the body of Lee Sam Hing, still clutching the imprisoning bars that had held him captive a mere 18 inches below water.

According to Ingham's information, Lee had had another Chinese with him, and the diver probed through the open window with a boat hook until he snagged another floating body. He couldn't draw this corpse through the open port, so he clambered top side to enter from the deck. Down a dark and gloomy underwater companionway trudged the diver, found the cabin door and forced it open with his crowbar to retrieve the body of Wang Foot.

THE FACT that two drowned men had been recovered from the steamer's water-filled cabin in the middle of Cadboro Bay naturally needed some enquiry. A few days later Superintendent of B.C. Provincial Police H. B. Roycraft, and Deputy Attorney-General P. A. Irving assembled all the facts before Coroner E. M. Johnson in the old police barracks in Bastion Square.

Two men who possibly faced the enquiry with some trepidation were George Rudlin and Asbury Insley, both steamboat skippers, both held in high repute along the coast.

George Rudlin, 49, had been 37 years at sea since his boyhood in fishing smacks along the Essex coast. At 16, seaman on a troopship bound for the Crimea, he was later on the clipper ship Red Gauntlet, and finally he came to Victoria in 1859. Settling on Discovery Island he skippered a variety of coastal craft until he had become master of the Enterprise, the Canadian Pacific Navigation Co.'s Victoria-New Westminster ferry.

Insley, 56, was an American from the state of Delaware, who'd been 43 years at sea. The problems which had en-guifed Rudlin and Insley ap-peared from out of the blue of a clear summer sky on the early afternoon of July 28, 1885, when the Rithet and the Enterprise steamed toward one another near Ten Mile Point. The three year old Rithet, northbound from Victoria, had aboard about 70 passengers and 400 tons of freight. Her grand saloon was the last word in gilded and veneer wood-work, adorned with Corinthian columns and velvet pile car pets. There were even spring mattresses in every bunk. In the dining saloon this after-noon white-clad waiters hustled to and fro to serve a second sitting, which was the moment bewhiskered Capt. Insley had chosen to eat his belated lunch.

At the wheel he had left the quartermaster, and somewhere on deck was the mate.

At the time a strong flood tide was carrying the Rithet past the Willows toward Ten Mile Point.

North of the point and just out of sight of the oncoming Rithet was the sidewheeler Enterprise making slower time against the tide. She had left New Westminster about seven that morning with around 50 passengers, a considerable amount of freight and 30 head of cattle. As the Enterprise drew near the point, Skipper Rudlin, in the pilot house, noticed his quartermaster was taking full advantage of the back eddy, and steering to keep close ashore approaching Ten Mile Point.

Came the moment, around half past two.

Came the moment, around half past two, when the Rithet rounded the point and the vessels were in sight of one another. For some inexplicable reason the Rithet, despite the sea room, held a course straight for the Enterprise.

when the ships were about 300 yards apart, a mile north of Ten Mile Point, the Rithet blew one blast—"I am altering course to starboard"—and got the answering whistle from the Enterprise. They would have passed close to each other, port to port, had not fate suddenly taken a hand. The tide caught the alower moving Enterprise and swuag her into the path of the Rithet when they were within a stone's throw.

Rudin sprang for the wheel to help his quartermaster, but it was too late to bring her back on course. With a resounding crash the vessels hit, the bow of the Rithet tearing deep into the Enterprise's bulwarks eight feet from the bow on the starboard side.

PRINCESS VICTORIA, gone but not for gotten, was Capt. Rudin's last command.

Wong Foot, might have been sleeping when the water engulfed them

There was something curious about this secretive pair, for they had quite a sum of money on them. Lee Sam Hing had close to $600 in cash, plus Hong Kong bills of ex-change for another $1,000. Wong Foot had around $400 in his money belt. Perhaps, as subsequent events proved, they might have been engaged in some sort of opium deal, common in those days when opium factories flourished in Victoria.

Word of the drowning spread through China-town and a day later an excited party of Chinese came out to Cadboro Bay to claim the bodies. They would have liked the money, too, but on this point the law said "no", at least for the time being. That there was more to the incident than we can now fathom, was proved a week or so later when one of the Chinese group was found dead, huddled in a clump of bushes near the bay. There had apparently been some sort of struggle, but the mystery was never unravelled.

THE RESULTING inquest and steamboat enquiry put the blame for the collision on Capt. Insley who, it was proved, had left an uncertificated, inexperienced man at the wheel, a man who, despite having a 1,000-yard wide channel, held to a course that imperilled the oncoming ship. Poor old Insley as a result lost his ticket for a year.

In the weeks that followed salvaged material from the Enterprise was taken in scows to Van Volkenburgh's wharf, and finally the boilers and engines were removed. Eventually only the hull was left, and there it stayed as a legacy for Cadboro Bay.

Cadboro Bay.

This wasn't, by the way, George Rudlin's first experience with Cadboro Bay, Fourteen years be fore, in the schooner Black Diamond, he'd been forced to seek shelter there in a nor'easter.

It was a Sunday in December, 1871, when he was forced to drop both anchors to hold his ground. Finally, around 5-p.m., one chain snapped, and around 10 that night the other let go. The Black Diamond was soon on the beach, a total surgeds.

Rudlin and his three-man crew got ashore in a boat, drenched with freezing spray, and while the men ran up and down the beach all night to keep their circulation going, George Rudlin walked to Victoria for help.

According to the record, George was a sort of "grand old man" of coastal shipping in his latter days. Once, it's remembered, he threw a big partly aboard the old Charmer to celebrate its 3,000th crossing of the gulf; but his biggest me-ment must have come in 1903 when he got com-mand of the brand new Princess Victoria, fastest vessel, it's said on the Pacific Ceast. The man who had served in the clipper Red Gauntlet, sped in this new steam clipper—one day in August, 1903— from Victoria to Vancouv r in three hours and 55 minutes. It was only a month later that he died in Vancouver of a heart attack, his own course run,

A more modern coincidence is in the fact that last month a one-time police associate of mine, Inspr. Wymond "Kelly" Irving 1 the R. C. M. Police arrived in Victoria to fill a new post. "Kelly" Irving should have more than passing interest in the Cadboro Bay scene, for it was his grandfather, Deputy Attorney-General (later Judge) P. A. These things he did from Regina.

And Al recollects that these auditions, involving some 30 assorted artists, were conducted in a music store, It was the commissioners who persuaded him to audition and, when the terms of his bright, new contract were divulged, he found himself with a very minimum of five programs a week, each of 15 minutes, a lordly stipend of $25 a week and a guarantee of just one month.

In 1941 he came to Victoria to radio CFCT, now CJVI.

In 1941 he came to Victoria to radio CFCT, now CJVI.

And Al has had some notable programs. He was with Jascha Galperin, later concert-master of the Calgary Symphony, at Lake Louise in 1936.

Here he met many of the great entertainment stars of that day such as Ginger Rogers, Kate Smith and Fred Astaire.

He accompanied the well.

Rogers, Kate Smith and Fred Astaire.

He accompanied the well known Helene Morton on "Only A Rose" and tenor, Jack Dale on "Moonlight on the River." Soprano Jean Graham was another on the list of distinguished artists for whom he played.

His "Pianology" was heard from coast to coast, a program in which he played some simple, well known melody in the styles of the various great musicians, classical and modern. There was no little outcry in the press when this program was withdrawn.

"Garden of Melody" and "Pastel Panels" were two others among his shows. The "Timber Wolves" from Prince Albert featured any talent that happened into the studio-with Al accompanying.

Then there was "Al and Bill." We know well enough who "Al" was but there was an odd coincidence about "Bill." He was actually Cyril Hampshire who had taken music lessons from Edward Isaacs at the same time as Al, arrived in Canada within four days of Al and, subsequently, lost complete track of him for 15 years!

"I always seem to have been complete track of him for 15 years!

"I always seem to have been working for Christmas cheer, relief, the needy and so on." observes Al. This he was, and it's certainly nothing to be asshamed of.

Among many others he played a "Relief" broadcast from Prince Albert in the "hungry thirties." He played, without a note of music, from 8 p.m. until 2.30 a. m., by which time the piano bench had developed a hardness immeasurably more a hardness immeasurably more pronounced than that of rock or iron. He played—from mem-ory—375 requests, each accom-panied by a donation and made over $160 for the fund. He was floored only twice during this marathon performance in the matter of being unable to re-member how a request went matter of being anable to remember how a request went and, having offered to pay 5c every time this happened, "got stuck for a dime."

He also conducted an orchestra and played at a big "Elks Christmas Cheer and Relief Fund" affair in 1932.

These are just a few of the Fund" affair in 1932.

These are just a few of the highlights in the career of Al Smith who has been severally titled "Man with a Million Musical Memories," "Amiable Al" and so on.

He has been associated with the business end of radio, too; particularly in the sales department. And, of course, his piano work has taken him quite a long way from broadcasting studios to concert stages, theatre musicals and other affairs of this nature.

And he has composed a number of songs especially for service clubs, as well.

service clubs, as well.

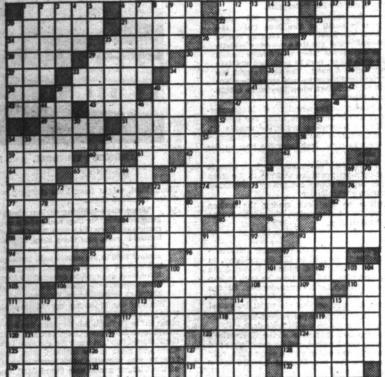

Thirty-one years? It is not a long time measured on the scale of all time. But it is a long time in one man's span and it bespeaks a great devo-tion as well as great accom-plishment in whatsoever puruit so occupies it.

In Al's case the devotion is self-evident. As to the accom-plishment? Well, radio popular-ity program charts show that the two programs in which Al-currently stars — one with organist, Jack Lenaghan — stand head and shoulders above every other offering.

And, if press notices mean anything, it must have been the same from the beginning—even from the time in 1921 when attired in his dinner clothes, Al entertained a company of the pressure of the same pany of farmers at Kinistino, in Saskatchewan, and scored his greatest triumph not with Bach, Brahms or Beethoven but with "Turkey in the Herein, I think, lurks a secret—the secret of those 31 years of success. As a person and as a planist Al has something for everybody to like.

Of course, if you're handy with needle and thread, try making your own design. It needn't be elaborate. For example, sketch a music bar and notes across the back of a glove; then reoutline in black colorfast embroidery thread. And while you're about it, might as well let friends know what you're doing—slipping them the 'glad hand,' naturally! Latter greeting can be embroidered on palm of glove, as the picture of Miss Mimieux illustrates.

which marks the end of the nectar flow, he got a few pounds of honey out of it, too. An annual yield of about 75 pounds a hive, after extraction from the comb and foreign bodies are removed, is considered to be a good crop.

THE SKILLED BEE-KEEPER opens his hives as infrequently as possible but as often as necessary. During the nectar flow he checks them every 10 days, after directing a whiff of smoke at the hive to keep the bees docile. At other times he opens them only to make sure there is plenty room, to take honey out, to remove surplus queen cells, or to see that the queen is laying well.

Unattended, a queen will lay eggs for two or three years, but as she ages her laying assumes a scattered pattern in the brood cells. Worker bees will start a supercedure cell in which to raise a new queen. Rather than let nature progress to this state, the bee-keeper requeens the hive each year. This also Issens the danger of swarming.

In fall the drones, who have been leading a dilettante's life all spring and summer, come to the end of the line. To winterize—cutting down on population and conserving food supplies—the workers obey the impulse within them to jettison the free-loaders. A wing is relentlessly clipped off each drone; he is dragged forcibly out of the hive. Not only is he not allowed back in, but been waited on since birth, he cannot forage for himself and dies of starvation.

Euthanasia does not enter the picture since the honeybee has a barbed stinger which it cannot withdraw, and so would lose its own life if it stung to death a drone.

By now the bee-keeper has jars and jars of rich golden honey which, having been heated to 165° F, will not crystallize and will not ferment, being low in bacterial content. (Solid honey has been allowed to crystallize, then finely ground and homogenized to spreading consistency.) It is exceptionally nutritious as a food, and has also been used for hundreds of years in the making of mead.

The staunchest advocates for honey are the The staunchest advocates for honey are the bees themselves. They make it—they know it's good. Though aware of the bees' feeling, the Lohrs were nevertheless most surprised when they one day found their basement a-buzz with thousands of bees—until-Mrs. Lohr remembered she had left open the basement door with combs of honey stored inside. The bees had come to claim their own! claim their own!

By dint of much swishing and shooing Lohr got them all outside again, without a sting. Milton's words from "Paradise Lost" seem to fit the situation to perfection:

"Accuse not Nature, she hath done her part; do thou but thine!"

Baily Colonist 11 SUNDAY, MAY 15, 1960

THE FUR TRADE and exploration of western and northern Canada was carried on chiefly through its lakes and rivers. The 'brigades' changed with the passing of time.

passing of time.

From the earliest days, the Montreal Brigade made the long difficult journeys with birch bark cances, penetrating deeper and deeper into the west and north, to the Pacific and the Arctic. After the union of the Northwesters and the Hudson's Bay Company in 1821, the Montreal base was abandoned and the Churchill Brigade took over, using York boats, up Churchill River and crossing the divide to waters draining to the Arctic.

When the railway reached Edmonton, a freight road was constructed to Athabaska River, 100 miles north. From here, there was downstream travel to the Arctic and the Churchill route was abandoned Many boats went down-stream and few returned, and a new type of craft was devised which became known as the Athabaska scow. It had to meet certain conditions; it should be cheap; it must have flexibility fore and aft for the drop over the cascades and for twist in big waves of the rapids and lakes. It must also carry a good load and handle with a small crew.

The Athabaska scow met these conditions. It

The Athabaska scow met these conditions. It was a glorified packing box, could carry about 10 tons and four men could handle it. Roughly it was 50 feet long, 12 feet wide and four feet deep. Each scow had a steersman, familiar with the rapids, and three men at the sweeps. A brigade might consist of 25 scows and had one or more guides who would pick out the channels according to the stage of the water.

ATHABASKA LANDING, the end of the freight road, was a busy place in spring. Convoys of freighters brought supplies from Edmonton, all that would be required for the northern posts for at least the next year. A sawmill shrieked, turning logs fresh from the forest into green lumber. Carpenters framed, planked and plastered tar on the seams. One after another, finished craft were brought to the river bank.

With the last snow, Indians and half-breeds gathered at the landing from their winter trapping grounds, Their summer life with the transport was about to begin. Men and dogs thronged the streets and mine host of the Grand Central did a rushing business.

The rivers that form the hedwaters of the Mackenzie rise in the Rockies and have two floods: a small one when the lee goes out at the beginning of May and a heavy one in August when mountain water comes down. It is important that these floods be taken advantage of, negotiating the rapids of the upper river and sandbars fayther down where the current slackens and much silt is denosited.

Is deposited.

Scows were launched as soon as the ice cleared. This was a critical time, as loading commenced. As soon as supplies left the warehouse, they were exposed to the attack of the starving sleigh dogs. A drop in the water level might cause the scow to settle on the boulders, causing damage and most scows leaked at first and had to be pumped out frequently. Watchmen were appointed but often the attractions on shore sense of duty . . . then dogs and water rose in the bilge.

FINALLY the last sack and case were loaded, crews were alloted and guides appointed, the last man rounded up, the last joke or insult exchanged between ship and shore. A few srokes carried the scows into the stream, one after another, the

One small rapid is named the "Joli Fou" from the fact that a native named the "Joll Fou" from the tact that a native ran his cance on the only exposed rock. There is an uncapped gas well near Calling River that has been burning since about 1900 with a roar that could be heard a mile away. The boatmen relaxed in idleness. The brigade tied up for mitsu, the noon meal and at night. For the first trip, there was a possibility of encountering an ice jam and piled up ice lined the shores.

Finally, the easy life ended when Grand Rapids was reached. Then the real work and excitement

THE EBOSION for thousands of years has carried away the soil and boulders accumulated on the river bed. When this was approaching the rock foundation, the river, widened by the cutting of its banks, became shallower and rapids formed where boulders dammed the stream. Still farther down, the limestone bed caused two small falls: the the limestone bed caused two small falls; the Little Cascade a couple of feet and the Big Cascade, a six foot drop. Conditions changed both in the rapids and the cascade with the stages of the

In 1911 I travelled with the Brigade and we had a good stage of water and little trouble. In 1916, at a good stage of water and little trouble. In 1916, at the same season, early May, we encountered low water record with the worst conditions for navigation. That year, if we had been a week later, we should have travelled with a good spring flood. Even the most experienced guides could not predict the time of the flood and the traders were forced to set out at the earliest possible time in the spring to bring the new season's supplies to the trading posts whose shelves were practically bare.

The river drops 30 feet in a quarter of a mile at Grand Rapids, which are wide and shallow and strewn with great boulders. It would be impossible to run the Grand if it were not for an island close to the east bank. Part of the stream flows through this narrow channel among great rounded boulders which check its force. Scows could be taken through with light or half loads. Carge landed on the island has brought to its lower end by a push car, run on wooden rails. A charge was made by the HBC for use of this tramway which made it the most profitable railway in the world

A SCOW could break its back on a deep fall. Here the Brigade reloads one of the fleet after it has been dropped over the lip of the bverfall.

It was claimed. Users provided the motive power. On account of the low water in 1914 we had to shove the scows over this tramway, no easy task.

THERE IS A STORY of a party of Klondikers who were drifting downstream in complete ignor-ance of its dangers. All were asleep, including the watchman. The scow chose the main channel but by the good luck which attends such people, it ran and on a flat rock at the head and hung there till men on the island recued them—all except the watchman. He was sleeping on the front deck and the impact pitched him overboard.

Rapid follows rapid for the next 80 miles. The Rapid follows rapid for the next 80 miles. The guide picked the course according to the stage of the water. They had seen the river at all stages and knew every rock and how to avoid it. Scows followed in single file, the steersman directing his crew to pull or hold, to cross the stream or follow it, or to ward off rocks with their poles. There was no more dozing nor idle talk. When strong action was required, the men at the sweeps respond instantly to signal or command. The natives were in their element and enjoyed the excitement.

were in their element and enjoyed the excitement. The character of the valley changed. The timbered slopes were replaced by steep terraces, rising one from another, marking water levels in the distant past, with bed rock showing in the lower bank. Two of the rapids were particularly dangerous on account of the intricate channel to be followed—Boiler and Long Rapid. The guide is usually took the scows through in sections of six with the most experienced steersmen. In 1914, one of our scows, with the cook, missed a turn and was holed. Dishes, pots, bannock and other gear went overboard but the scow was beached safely.

went overboard but the scow was beached sarely. Finally, the river reaches the limestone which underlies the drift soil, and straight drops were made at the Little and Big Cascade. The former is not serious, except at very low water when the crews must take to the water and shove, but the Big Cascade is a more challenging problem with its six-foot drop and only one notch near the east shore where it can be jumped. Again this depends on the stage of the water.

WHEN THE RIVER was in flood, the Big Cascade could be jumped with full loads with the danger of broaching to in the big back-curling wave below. With ordinary water, cargos were landed above and the scows run light, sometimes strengthened fore and aft with a rope from bow to stern passing over a support amidships to prevent it breaking its back. In 1914, extreme low water made the jump there impossible. We crossed the river to where the big drop is broken by a number of small ones. An exposed bit of rock near the foot was used as an island. Cargo was packed to it—not easy on the slimy ledges. The scows were then shoved over by the crews and reloaded below.

Below the Cascades, there was a dash through the big waves of Mountain Rapid and an amble around the curve of the Moberly. Then, one of the most beautiful river views of the North opened up, the junction of Clearwater River with the Athohaska bered islands. The bordering hills draw back and lose their beetling character and where the rivers unite, there is an exten-sive flat on which is the settlement of Fort McMurray, framed by the valley hills,

At this time, the settlement consisted of the Hudson's Bay Co. tort and a Scottish free trader, Bill Gordon, and his sister Christina. There were a few cabins and, in summer, Indian teepees lent a romatic air, quite lacking in the modern town. The men of the brigade and those of the fort had much the same interests and the arrival of the first fleet of the season was a great event, marked

It usually happened that he left the Landing to late that he was frozen in en route and had to so late that he was frozen in en route and had to complete the journey with dogs, Christina was a fine woman, (I named a river for her).

IN PAUL FONTAIN'S teepee, I heard his pries of the Churchill Brigade which used to travel down Clearwater River from Portage la Loche, the 13-mile crossing of the Hudson Bay-Arctic Divide. It appeared that Paul was the mightlest of the voyageurs. He was now living in retirement on his pension from the company of $25 a year. His stories always ended — "But we were men in those days."

He would usually discover that he happened to be out of tobacco and had very little flour or bacon. The old steamer Graham was standing by and would handle the next stage to the Fort Smith Rapids, so the "river dogs" returned to Grand Rapids by an overland trail to meet the next brigade and bring it through the rapids. Each man carried his own rations, sow belly and flour which he cooked on a forked stick (making a flour and water bannock called "beaver tails").

Some scows continued downstream with the Graham, most were broken up for lumber but a

Graham, most were broken up for lumber but a few had to be brought back to the Landing with the few and, at the end of the season, with men not wintering in the country. They were towed by man-power by a method called "tracking."

A crew of seven men did the hauling. Each man had his own tump line-attached to the long, hard, twist rope which was secured to the scow in such a way that it was almost in a state of belance; the trackers drew it towards shore while the current forced it out. The steersman could direct it towards when if he men towards when it is to be seen in the steer when it is towards when it is to be seen in the steer when it is the steer when it is to be seen in the steer when it is to be seen in the steer when it is to be seen in the steer when it is to be seen in the steer when it is to be seen in the steer when it is to be seen in the steer when it is to be seen in the steer when it is to be seen in the steer when it is to be seen in the steer when it is to be seen in the steer when it is to be seen in the steer when it is to be seen in the steer when it is to be seen in the steer when it is to be seen in the steer when it is to be seen in the steer when it is to be seen in the steer when it is to be seen in the steer when it is to be seen in the steer when it is to be s towards shore if the water was deep—then hauling was easy—or out into the heavy stream when rocks and shoals had to be avoided.

Then the trackers had to bend their backs and dig in their toes to avoid being torn off the shore. Sometimes a tow line broke and hard won distance was lost.

For the trackers, hauling was not their only trouble. They had to find footing, often on steep cutbacks, sometimes in deep, slippery mud and the rear man had to clear the line when it snagged. When one bank became too difficult they were ferried to the other shore . . and always the other shore looked better, but seldom was. In the heavy rapids, progress was made foot by foot and much depended on the skill of the steersman, who might have helpers with poles to assist in avoiding dangerous rock.

Hard or easy, they had to get through. There was no other means of bringing out freight or men.

THE RAILWAY reached Fort McMurray in THE RAILWAY reached Fort McMurray in 1918. It was not a very god railway. A small storm or a moderate flood easily interrupted its halting service but . . . freight could be handled cheaper by it than by the river. The days of the Brigade were over. Years later, I met Captain Haight, then skipper of a gas boat, towing a scow loaded with extrackers and their dogs but still the gallant riverman of Brigade days. And on a remote rivernamed "Skin of an Animal"—Edga yeth Theleo—I met Francois. Northern transport followed the changing pattern of the times. Sternwheel steamers made it possible to make three trips in a season to the mouth of the Mackenzie. A 16-mile portage trail was opened up past the Fort Smith Rapids. Ferhaps the last use of Red River carts, drawn by oxen, was made there till horses were brought in finally, during the rush to the Norman oil fields in 1921, two tractors, the grandfathers of tractors, were used even to haul scows across the portage with automobiles for freight. That year, the first airplanes flew from Edmonton to Norman Wells. Mail and passenger planes followed but until 1942 there was a period when pontoon equipped planes could not land.

Again it was oil that brought changes in trans-port. For the construction of the Canol pipline, landing fields were constructed and airplanes took over passenger transortation and fast freight. The two old sternwheelers, Mackenzie River and Distributor, made their last voyage down the great river and were replaced by great barges shoved by deisel-nowered boats.

THIRTY YEARS AGO, young peop had practically to be dragged to look at any furniture that wasn't brand new," recalls Mrs. Faith Grant.

"Today, more often than not, it is the young people who take the lead in seeking out antique shops when a wed-ding present or other important gift is to be chosen. And frequently they'll ask, 'Is it old enough to be a good investment as an antique'?"

Antique, yet suited to the needs of a young family, can mean anything aged from 150 to 250 years, for the shortest description of the most durable and i que consists of just two words:

For the family which must live consistanty with its furniture investment, cottage oals can be a lasting joy. "Cottage" in this connection is not to be confused with the current real estate euphemsum for "shack." It refers rather to furniture of a scale suitable for the less than castle-sized home.

The man who is occasionally careless with his smoking, the guest who sets a glass down on any horizontal surface, and the children who run little racing cars into the dining room table legs are just minor incidents in the life of furniture which survived years of banishment from fashion mainly because it was too tough to chop up and burn.

TO A DELICATE occasional chair of later vintage, a 250-pound athelete can be a calamity, but to a little oak joint stool which once held the likes of Falstaff, your well-fed friend won't even cause a creak or groan. Apart from its tough wood, much of the secret of English oak furniture strength comes from the way it was pegged together.

We use the term "square peg in a round hole" today to imply an impossible combination of man and job. But get a square peg of green and tender wood, just too large for the round hole, force the peg in, and it is there for the life of the wood. Thus uch old oak furniture is made much old oak furniture is made.

Although out of style during Victoria's heaviest settler influx, a great deal of oak furniture came here, around the Horn, in ships of the same hardy wood. It came because it was tough enough to stand the several months' journey. Large dower chests, built to hold a lifetime supply of clothing and linens for the girl getting married, proved ideal for packing of such treasures from home as books, fine linens, and blankets. Without crafing of any kind, without even trunk straps, these loaded chests weathered the rough rides in ships' holds. Four screw holes in each lid tell the whole story of the extra precautions taken for the trip.

OVER THE YEARS, chests of many sorts—the universal storage containers—made their way to Victoria. With skilled and knowledgeable cabinet work, it is possible to adapt these to fit into modern life. An example is a corn measure, once kept in a stable to hold grain or the horses, which has been "opened up"—with glass doors in its back to form a china cabinet, in keeping with the furnishings of an "olde towne" kitchen. In this same room, a jong case—or "grandfather"—clock whose works had ceased to function, can be made the hiding place for the ironing board.

Not many people today would have use for a Bible box as such.

Bible box as such.

The Holy Scriptures today stand side by side with school study books, book club offerings, the latest borrowings from the library, and paperback mysteries. Ingenious triple use of an oak box, standing about chair seat height, and dating from the days when the Bible was the only book in the home, can be made. The sturdy little piece of furniture contains the mending kit, doubles as an occasional table, and fills in as an extra seat when the family has an unusual number of visitors.

the family has an unusual number of visitors. Oak tables of many types may be seen in Victoria, including some very handsome examples with fixed tops and carved freizes. But probably for the family with space problems, there could be no more practical table than the gate-leg style, easily folded down when not in use. The natural patinal acquired through centuries of rubbing and beeswaxing, provides its own protection against heat, spilled liquids, and other mealtime hazards. The stretchers which stood up to heavy boots of original owners probably take little more punishment from children's restless feet.

HOW ABOUT OAK?

No Finer Furniture

WEISH DRESSER . . . in English oak

OF ALL the oak furniture which has found its way to Victoria as settlers' effects of a century of migrants, probably no pieces are more popular than the Welsh dressers which provide such handsome storage and display space for china and other dining room treasures. The qualifying regional adjective probably stems from the fact that the making of these and other oak pieces continued in Wales long after city folk in less remote parts of Britain had followed the court vogue into walnut. Both the dressest and other pieces of Welsh origin have especial interest because of their color. Never originally stained in any way, they have weathered originally stained in any way, they have weathered to a pleasing honey tone when they have had the advantages of country life, kind treatment and sunshine. Another reason for the lighter tone of oak pieces of late manufacture was the change-over from the practice of using linseed oil instead of beeswaxing.

Among the large pieces of oak which settlers have brought and collectors have bought are chairs, settles, bureaux, even some of the great court cupboards, and — rarely — complete canopied beds. Of unusual interest are the settles and chairs whose backs may be adjusted to form table surfaces; these are usually quite massive and not particularly suitable for use in a moderately sized home.

Extensive development of metal, ceramic, and ately sized home.

Extensive development of metal, ceramic, and glass containers for foods and liquids has progressed to the point, where the idea of using wood for such purposes would not occur to most of us, except of course to those who buy rum barrels. But before the general acceptance of pewter vessels, all containers for the storage and serving of food and beverages were coppered just like barrels, of stout English oak, Adaptions of these for house hold storage and ornament are many, and charming. A few years ago, there was even a cooper in Victoria who specialized in such utensils—called "treen"—made from trees—and sold them called "treen"-made from trees-and sold them in the public market. If you happen to have a twin of the "old oaken bucket" in your attic, don't just sing about it; use it for a planter, or dream up an original way to show it.

One of the most appealing aspects of oak collecting is the wide variety of stylings in which it was made. You can be as plain or as fancy as you please in your preference. There are oak pieces with no ornament beyond their sensible, functional shapes, or there is oak whose carving ranges from the simlicity of the classic "linenfold" ornament up through scroll and floral treatments with or without contrasting wood inlay.

through scroll and floral treatments with or without contrasting wood inlay.

Keep an eye on old English oak. Put a hand on it and feel the warm patina of the wood, so different from the coldness of French polish and varnishes. Even put your feet on it, if you must.
It might be called the man's antique—sturdy and rugged. It has turned the edge of the best tools, lived in stables, survived cold, damp, and sometimes even flame. It'll survive you. But if you do treat it kindly, oak will reward you with a beauty beyond your richest dreams.

FAMILY HOBBY

B<sup>oys'</sup> pockets, half the time, are weighted down with stones and pebbles. Why they carry them, no one knows any more than the boys themselves know what kind of stones or pebbles they are. A little girl picks up a bright colored stone and says, "Look, Daddy, what's this?" Here, then can be the beginning of a family hobby in which old and young together learn something of the world ab

The backyard or driveway is the place to start. What kind and color of soil is there? Are rocks plentiful in it? Are there outcropping ledges or boulders? Once these questions have been boulders? Once these questions have been answer-ed, it's time for short, lay trips to neighborhood places to learn something more about rocks.

The family who lives in a coal mining region might arrange for a visit to the mine (coal is an organic sedimentary rock). Just as interesting will be a visit to a marble, limestone or sandstone quarry for families who live in such areas. Or, a day can be spent in the park looking closely at the rock formations that may be part of the scene or the stones that are on paths.

Take along on any expedition, even in the back-yard, old newspapers to wrap specimens for study indoors, a notebook and pencil. Pick up only small rock specimens of a size that will fit in the hand Wrap specimens in newspaper and number them, then beside the same number in a notebook, jot down any observations about the prevalence similar rocks, the land around it, and so on.

A small magnifying glass will be useful on trips and in studying specimens at home. There the fun is to identify and then label rocks. To label, put a small dab of enamel on the rock and when this has dried write on it with India ink.

Identification for many of common rocks is reasonably easy with any of several beginners' books on the subject. There is even a thoroughly illustrated paperback book, "Rock and Minerals" by Zim and Shaffer. On a rainy day, a trip to the moseum should make possible matching some of the specimens picked up by the family with those in the cases.

To identify, it is necessary to look, Look for color, substance, hardness, streaking, shape and texture. Note all of them and jot them down in the notebook. Test the specific gravity, and note that, too. Then turn to the illustrated book.

With the exception of a thin layer of soil which varies greatly in thickness, the earth is composed of rock. Rock extends from the surface downward for many miles. Quartz, agate, garnet, slate, marble, shale, sandstone—all these and many more are rocks. The soil in which plants grow is also

Monday, August 30, 1959, marked another milestone in the decline of the Island's fading coal-mining industry. On that Monday morning the doors of the "company office" in Cumberland remained locked. A notice on the door told the visitor where rents could be paid in future. The building, that for 67 years had served the mines, had lost its usefulness. had lost its usefulness.

had lost its usefulness.

In 1888 the Union Colliery Co., formed by Robert Dunsmuir and associates to work the Comox coalfields, began active operation. The prospecting, opening of mines and railroad building, begun so vigorously, then bore rapid fruit. In the third year, 1890, the mines gave work to a crew of 350 men who dug 78,000 long tons of coal. Something had to be done to supply the needs of these men and their families.

So in January, 1891, a company retail store needs of these men and their families.

So in January, 1891, a company retail store was opened. This, like other early-day company offices and warehouses, occupied one of a cluster of log buildings just south of the present junction Comox Lake Road and the road to Cumber-nd's Chinatown

THE FIRST STORE MANAGER was THE FIRST STORE MANAGER was A. Lindsay, and he found business good from the start. By September a permanent bookkeeper, named Auley, was added to the staff. The mines were booming, for in 1891 production had increased over 50 per cent to 129,000 tons, and the crew had grown to 585. Before the year was over it was plain the original log store was far too cramped, and the decision was reached to build

The first settlement, called "Union"—nearly The first settlement, called "Union"—nearly the same locality as the present-day Cumberland suburb known as "The Camp"—was in a valley running east from the present Chinatown road junction. The valley offered very little room for growth. Further east, where Cumberland now stands, it broadened. So it was decided to build the new store at the extreme eastern end of Union.

BACK in BUSINESS

THE BIG STORE, right, when occupied by Simon Leiser, eventually returned to the coal company owners as an office building. The photograph is the property of Mrs. S. P. Hanna, whose father, H. P. Collis, was manager of the store both for the company and the Leiser interests.

in it. By the end of 1892 James Dunsmuir decided to get out of the store business. An important factor in this decision was the delivery, all through 1892, of a glut of cheap Australian coal on the San Francisco market. Loss of sales kept the mines at Union (Cumberland) closed during the latter half of 1892.

Over the long view, the situation was still promising, and Dunsmuir made a deal with Simon Leiser, prominent Victoria merchant, to take over the store. Although Leiser's Victoria business was wholesale, he had operated retail stores at was wholesale, he had operated retail stores at Wellington and East Wellington. In December, 1892, Leiser took over stock and fixtures of the "new store" for $11,000, and undertook to rent the building for $75 a month. In January, 1893, Leiser commenced operations, retaining Collis as

AN ASTUTE MERCHANDISER, Leiser promptly christened it "The Big Store," and his advertising emphasized the size of the store and of its large and varied stock. He divided the of its large and varied SICCK. The divided the business into five departments. work "guaranteed to give satisfaction."

Associated was the boot and shoe department. The hardware and furniture department was really several departments in one. The grocery department carried a complete stock, even to flour and feed. The liquor department—for in those days there was no LCB—carried "a good assortment of the best brands of wine and whisky, gin, etc. Both cased and on draft." (Sic)

Leiser continued his business here for over seven years, moving to his next location in April-May, 1900. They built to last in those days—the "company office" still stands, and Leiser's 1900 store is still in use, by John-Cliff's department store in Cumberland, 60 years later. During the seven years Leiser occupied the "company office" business increased greatly. The store Lindsay thought hard to fill soon proved too small. The company built for Leiser, in the fall of 1895, an addition, the left-hand and smaller of the smaller of the Siamese twin buildings.

NOT ONLY was the building pre-eminent in commerce during those seven years, it was also Union and Cumberland's social centre. Leiser used a few rooms on the second story of the larger building to house the millinery. The greater part of this upper story, however, was used as a meting hall by Union Lodge, No. 11, IOOF. The Odd Fellows, who, in addition to the $12 monthly rental, had paid the company $120 in August, 1892, to have the ceilings raised, recouped their outlay by sub-letting to other fra-ternal organizations. An old sign, now in the museum of the Comox Valley Historical Society, which hung outside the building many years ago, lists the meetings.

Besides the Odd Fellows Union Lodge, No. 11, their Cumberland Encampment, No. 6, which, according to Tom Menzies, descendant of Comox Valley pioneers, was the social division of the Odd Fellows, gathered there. So did Cumberland Grove, No. 3, of the United Ancient Order of Druids, and the members of the Fraternal Order of Eagles. Later, in 1899, Mount Horeb Lodge, No. 1676, of the Orangeman; Benevolent Lodge, No. 14, of the Knights of Pythias, and the local Woodmen of the World, also used the hall.

By 1900 the centre of gravity of the twin settlements, Union and Cumberland, had swung east to Cumberland. The company's business, too, had grown, and the cluster of log buildings near Chinatown was inadequate. The Odd Follows moved east in March and Leiser followed in April. The company took full possession, and for the next 59 years the store buildings housed the "company office." A section was used for a warehouse. Besides the Odd Fellows Union Lodge, No. 11, FOB MANY YEARS part of the old store was the station, serving the Cumberland terminus of the company railroad from Union Bay. Passengers, express and freight, disembarked from the Joan, the Princess Mary and other coastal vessels at Union Bay, were handled here.

As an office building it was always the head-quarters of the Comox division of the Union Colliery Co., or as it was renamed by Dunsmuir—the Wellington Colliery Co., and later of Canadian Collieries (Dunsmuir) Ltd., the company which bought Dunsmuir's interests in 1910. From time to time, the general superintendent, with authority over the company's Nanaimo operations as well, had his desk there.

Notable superintendents were, in Dunsmuir's time, Frank D. Little, and, for Canadian Collieries, J. R. Lockard, Thomas Graham, Harold Baird and E. O. T. Simpson.

The offices of top management were here periodically, as in the regime of Lieut. Col. Charles W. Villiers, and in E. O. T. Simpson's early years as general manager.

As Many a Scotsman Knows

By JAMES K. NESBITT

WE NATIVE VICTORIANS have always taken Craigdarroch Castle for granted. It has always stood on its hilltop, dominating the skyline, a land-mark since 1890, and it was not until recently we realized what a treasure we

An older generation of Victorians called the place "Dunsmuir Castle," and let it go at that; Craigdarroch was a formiable name, difficult to pronounce and no one knew what it meant—no one bothered to find out.

I. who have delved so much into the past, accepted the name Craigdarroch without question. It never occurred to me to wonder why Robert Dunsmuir called his castle Craigdarroch.

A few years ago I saw a small note in The San Francisco Chronicle, stating the National Trust of Scotland had taken over Craigdarroch, the home of Annie Laurie. That aroused my curiosity, but I did no further research into the matter at that time.

but I did no further research into the matter at that time.

Not long ago someone called asking about Annie Laurie—was she a real, live person, or merely the mythical heroine of a romantic song, known the world over for its tenderness and its touching, haunting, illting air. I could not answer.

Then came a letter from Fraser Valley's Abbotsford, Sumas and Matsqui News, regarding a story in which I mentioned Craigdarroch Castle, and the letter said: "Our paper reaches many distant points, and one of them is in Dunfries, Scotland Oour reader there, Miss Lily Laurie, at 14 Church Crescent, is a regular reader of your column. She has sent a booklet about Annie Laurie, in the hope that you might be interested in it."

from it.

If cannot express what a thrill it was to receive this booklet, to learn that Annie Laurie was, indeed, a very much alive person, and to learn the connection between Craigdarroch Castle in Victoria and Craigdarroch House in Scotland.

DID ROBERT DUNSMUIR himself choose the name Craigdarroch for his castle in the New World? We shall never know.

In the castle's grand hallway, in the fireplace, is a scroll with the words, "Welcome ever smiles, and farewell goes out sighing," from Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida. In the mahogany mantelpiece, in the library, is the Francis and Bacon quotation: "Reading maketh a full man..."

How is it, therefore, that there's no quotation about Annie Laurie, no mention of her in the castle that was named for her home in Scotland?

Robert Dunsmuir, despite his hard-shelled exterior, his genius for making money, his drive and ambition and capacity for work, work, work, was a romantic at heart. Doubliess he had fallen in love with Annie Laurie when he first heard the song in his boyhood home in Scotland.

Had he lived to take up residence in his castle, perhaps, today there would be some mention of Annie Laurie in it... perhaps "Maxwelton's Braes are Bonnie" over another of the fireplaces.

CRAIGDARROCH

HOME OF ANNIE LAURIE

CRAIGDARROCH, seat of the Fergu

The beautiful booklet that Miss Lily Laurie sent to me from Scotland is written by Gordon Irving, with a foreword by Maj-Gen. Sir John E. Laurie, of Maxwelton, and a musical preface by Alan Murray, who wrote the delightful ballad, "Til Walk Beside You."

FROM GORDON IRVING'S research we learn that Annie Laurie was born at Maxwelton House, in Dumfriesshire, fourth daughter of Sir Robert Laurie, who recorded her birth: "At the pleasure of the Almighty God, my daughter, Anna Laurie, was born upon this, the 16th day of December, 1682, about six o' clock in the morning, and was baptised by Mr. George Hunter, minister of Glencairn."

The famous words "and for Bonnie Annie Laurie I'd lay me doun and dee' were originally written by William Douglas of Fingland, one of Annie's many suitors. Years later Lady John Scott partly altered the lines, wrote some new ones, and also the air that is now whistled and ed and sung by people everywhere.

The comety Annie, however, so histo is us, turned down William Douglas igland for Alexander Fergusson

Gordon Irving writes: "Fergusson was ung and handsome, three years her nior, with dark eyes and curling hair, d, morever, he was the proud owner of any goodly acres, a stately mansion use, and he belonged to one of the oldest milies in Dumfriesshire.

families in Dumriesshire.

"When Annie was 28, they were married at Glencairn, on the 29th of August, in the year 1710, in the same church where, as boy and girl, they had sat not many pews apart."

THUS IT WAS that Annie Laurie became mistress of Craigdarroch House, ancestral home of the Fergusson family. More than a century and a half later, another Scottish lass, Joan Olive White, as Mrs. Robert Dunsmuir, one of the great matriarchs of British Columbia, became mistress of Craigdarroch Castle in Victoria.

mistress of Craigdarroch Castle in Victoria.

They were sad years for Mrs. Dunsmuir, from 1890 fo 1908, for she moved into her castle as a new widow, and her life was beset by family bickerings, and the old lady became more or less a recluse, dying in her castle when her son James was lieutenant-governor, and they were not on speaking terms because of a family lawsuit, Despite the devotion that existed between them, each was stubborn in the Scottish way, and neither would give in. This was the great sorrow in the Dunsmuir family, that their millions could not purge away.

Dunsmuir family, that their millions could not purge away.

Alexander Fergusson of Craigdarroch, Annie's husband, died in 1749 at the age of 65, and lies buried in the Craigdarroch enclosure at Glençairn churchyard. In 1764—May 4—Annie Laurie died at Friars' Close, the home of her grandson, Robert Riddell, the antiquary and collector of ballads. She was in her 31st year.

Gordon Irving tells us many fascinating stories and legends in his book on the belle of Maxwelton: "Annie Laurie, it is not perhaps generally known, was the mother of Alexander Fergusson, hero of Robert Burns' song, The Whistle.' She and the Laird of Craigdarroch had several children... and the Laurie family have an intimate association with the story of the whistle.

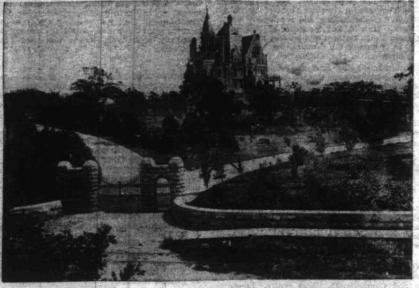

whistle. "This was an ebony instrument, the property of a gigantic Dane, who had a drinking capacity that was hard to equal. At the start of a drinking bout he would lay it on the table, and whoever was the best able to blow on it at the end of the session was reckoned 'Champion of the Whistle.'

"Annie Laurie's father, Sir Robert, defeated the Dane, it is said, after three days and three nights of hard drinking, left him under the table and then blew on the whistle his requiem shrill."

"For several years, the whistle remained in the Laurie family, At a final drinking contest, which took place at Friars' Close in October of 1790, it went to Alexander Fergusson, son of Annie Laurie."

Where is that whistle now?

Where is that whistle now?
